Elected, traditional chiefs confer at leaders' summit

Historic meeting to be first of many

OKMULGEE — It was billed as the first meeting of elected and traditional chiefs since the last century.

Principal Chief Bill Fife called a tribal leaders' summit Dec. 12 at the tribal capitol complex. It was estimated that more than 100 representatives from 25 ceremonial grounds met with Fife, second chief Shelly Crow, and other administration officials. The summit was moderated by tribal Supreme Court Justice Amos McNac.

The meeting was organized by tribal policy analyst Eddie LaGrone.

"I thought it was a very positive meeting environment with positive participation and the general response afterward was that [the summit] was a very good thing."

LaGrone said the Fife administration is trying to solicit input regarding needs and existing conditions at the leaders' grounds. Fostering improved relations

Second speaker named executive director

OKMULGEE — Jerry Wilson has been confirmed as executive director for the Muscogee (Creek) Nation tribal administration.

Wilson, 40, was nominated for the tribe's top non-elected position by Principal Chief Bill Fife and confirmed by the National Council. In his nominating letter Fife wrote, "my work, as Principal Chief, is saturated with administrative duties rather than Principal Chief functions which prohibits effective tribal government development and structure. If we are to continue to progress, we need Wilson as the tribe's top executive officer."

Wilson

Wilson was on the tribal staff in 1974 under former principal chief Claude Cox's administration. He was instrumental in the development of many tribal programs and the organization utilized with traditional leaders was a part of Fife's campaign platform.

Much of the discussion was centered on land tenure, health and language preservation, traditional representation at all levels, and the autonomy of the grounds.

Fife told the leaders that he would continue to meet with them and suggested that all groups participate in the governmental operations of the tribe. Fife said the next meeting may take place in March.

at Creek Nation today. Additionally, he was the first editor of the tribal monthly, The Muscogee Nation News.

Wilson, of Glenpool, resigned his seat as a Tulsa District representative to the tribal National Council to assume the position as director of administration.

As a representative, Wilson served on various committees and has authored numerous pieces of legislation; he was instrumental in developing the tribe's budgeting process. He was chosen second speaker of the Council for the 1992-93 legislative term.

Most recently, Wilson was also the chair of the small business occupations department at Oklahoma State University-Okmulgee. He has since resigned that position.

As director of administration, Wilson will be responsible for the majority of the day-to-day operations of the tribe and will work directly with the executive office.

Wilson said the decision to leave OSU-Okmulgee was difficult.

Creek Nation on schedule with plans of self-governance

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) Nation is on schedule with its plans for self-governance, says Eddie LaGrone, policy analyst for the tribe.

The Creek Nation is one of 30 tribes that made an application with the U.S. Department of Interior to begin self-governance. Through provisions of Public Law 100-472, selected tribes can contract, develop, and implement programs that are administered by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

"Basically, a tribe can redesign programs, and eliminate or create others, to be appropriate for specific tribal needs," LaGrone said.

The Creek Nation presently contracts many federal programs through the provisions of P.L. 93-638. P.L. 100-472, though similar, has significant differences, LaGrone said.

"[Administering programs] under 93-638, the tribes shadow the bureau's programs," LaGrone

Principal chief has favorable outlook for new year

by Bill Fife, principal chief

Nineteen ninety-two has been an exciting year. We have had many changes and improvements here at the capitol complex, with even greater progress expected in 1993.

As I reflect on the past few months, I am encouraged about the potential of the new year. The alliance the National Council and I have formed has made us partners for progress. Even though we may not agree on every issue, we will still come together for the good of Creek people. As I see it, we are all trustees for Creek citizens, custodians of the Muscogee heritage.

For the future, I want each and every citizen to know that I am obligated to helping the National Council fulfill our tribe's hope in reestablishing our own faith in each other. Nineteen ninety-three is the year for the Creek Nation to accomplish more — to translate the integrity of our goals into the fulfillment of our tribal mission.

To each of you, I wish the best in the year ahead. May the Creator watch over you and your loved ones.

The MNN announces adjustments, changes production deadlines

by Gerold Wofford

Publication of the November and December issues of The Muscogee Nation News was delayed. To correct production complications of the tribal newspaper, the communications department has been reorganized.

The Muscogee Nation News will change its production deadlines to the first of the month in order to release the paper during the first week of every month. Insuring events that affect tribal government and its citizens are read in a timely and consistent manner is an important department objective.

Though the department has been reorganized, it is still incumbent on communities, grounds, churches, and citizens, to cooperate in getting information to the department in a timely manner for publication in The Muscogee Nation News. It's a two-way street — the department needs your help for it to help you.

Again, we regret any inconvenience caused by production delays.

Clarification

Those opposed to the bill were: Clarence Cloud and Earl Wheeler, Creek District; Sandy McIntosh and Tommy Newton, McIntosh District; Judy Roberts, Okfuskee District; Charlie Litsey, Okmulgee District; and Irene Cleghorn and Okema Randall, Tulsa District.

Letters to the editor

Representative wants jobs given to needy

Editor:

This is a letter in behalf of many tribal citizens that are unemployed. Why are we still hiring retired people that have good retirement incomes and in some cases, [with] their wives still employed. The retirees don't have the worry or expense of sending children to school and providing the needs of children.

I am sure that out of [more than] 30,000 Creek citizens, there are many qualified people to hold many positions within the Creek Nation.

Retirees: let's retire and give the jobs to the young adults with families.

Charlie Litsey, Okmulgee

Editor's note: Litsey is an Okmulgee District representative to the tribal National Council.

Tulsa representative says thanks

Editor:

I'd like to take the opportunity to wish all Creek-Yuchi citizens prosperity in the new year. I especially want to thank my Tulsa District constituents who have been very supportive of my efforts to work for the betterment of the tribe. Thank you and God bless you.

Don Cahwee, Glenpool

Editor's note: Cahwee is a first-term Tulsa district representative to the tribal National Council.

Tribe, Tulsa University cooperate for benefits

by Shelly Crow, second chief

Recently, the Muscogee (Creek) Nation has networked with the University of Tulsa to serve our people — it has been a win-win situation.

Tulsa nursing students, under the direction of my instruction, provided physical examinations of Creek Nation Head Start students. In the past, this service was contracted with a physician. The tribe saved nearly $8,000.

The nursing students gained valuable practical experience. Nursing students also did a clinic rotation with the Sapulpa Indian Health Center. Senior nursing students developed a recipe book for preparing low calorie, low sodium, low fat, low cholesterol, low sugar, and high fiber meals. These were presented to the Sapulpa Indian Health Center. This fulfilled their community project requirements.

The physical education project group presented the Sapulpa Indian Health Center with a television.

The National Council and the Principal Chief's office is acknowledging the TU nursing students for their endeavors to work with the tribe and learning the Creek culture in order to better serve their citizens' health needs.

This is one of the many good things that has happened in 1992. Each student carried a patient for eight weeks — patients that are normally not served because of the overloaded public health nurses. These students worked with other agencies such as tribal community health representatives, elderly nutrition, and others.

Tribe wins grant to build new facility

Multi-purpose facility first of its kind for Creek Nation

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) Nation has been awarded a $700,000 grant to build a multi-purpose facility at the tribal capitol complex in Okmulgee.

The tribe received notice of the award from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in late December. The building will be the first multi-purpose facility built on the complex at Okmulgee since the construction of the independent agencies (mound) building in 1979. The last addition to the grounds was the commodity food distribution warehouse, built in 1990. The facility is expected to house an elders' nutrition center, space for Head Start, adult education, a library, a wellness center, and other offices.

The building is to be utilized for increasing education levels, improving nutrition and health practices, developing social and academic readiness for young Indians, strengthening tribal identity, and centralizing tribal resource materials.

"Several Creek citizens mentioned that by building a facility to support long-term development of our Creek people, the Creek Nation as a whole would benefit even more," said Bill Fife, principal chief.

"We decided to combine distinct populations and functions in this facility to enhance and complement future development of the tribe, as well as meet the funding criteria of HUD."

Other programs are expected to contribute funds to the construction project.

Fife said the facility addresses a major problem — lack of adequate building space for direct services to clients.

"It was our intent to design a building which could be practical, attractive, and complement our existing architecture as well," Fife said. "Additionally, the facility will increase the amount of space for services significantly."

The building will include 21,264 square feet of floor space.

Council places Holdenville bingo hall under gaming board

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) National Council placed the Holdenville Indian Community bingo project under the tribe's gaming board at its November session held at the tribal capitol complex.

The 31-member tribal legislature also appropriated $43,000 from the bingo revenue account to complete the start-up costs for the project.

The 1990-91 National Council approved the construction of the Holdenville bingo operation in 1991. The original bill allowed the community to manage the hall.

Internal disputes over the use of funds and community civil disputes contributed to delays in development.

Under provisions of the bill, the tribe will receive 70 percent of the net revenue from the operation to the community's 30 percent. The legislation also allows the community to assume management responsibility for the bingo operation at an unspecified later date.

Voting against the bill: (representative, followed by district) Sandy McIntosh, McIntosh; Irene Cleghorn and Okema Randall, Tulsa. Absent: Clarence Cloud, Creek; Tommy Newton, McIntosh; Mae Jackson, Okfuskee; George Tiger, Okmulgee; and Alexander Thomas, Wagoner. Conducting the meeting was Jerry Wilson, Tulsa.

In other business, the Council.

—approved a resolution rejecting the Bureau of Indian Affairs' plan for reconciliation and audit of trust funds. Voting against the resolution: Wynema Roberts, Okfuskee;

Oklahoma City starts building fund drive with language tapes

OCMA utilizes language tapes as fundraiser

• For a donation of $25 to the Oklahoma City Muscogee (Creek) Association building fund, the organization will send donors community-produced Mvsko language tapes. The audio tape, "Beginning Creek," is accompanied by a five-lesson book. Community chair Rufus "Buddy" Cox said the tape consists of vocabulary — approximately 500 Creek words — with English to Mvsko translation and correct pronunciation. Cox said the taping is narrated by Thewarle Baptist Church Deacon George Bunny. It is a project of the association's Creek language and building fund committees, he said. The fundraising project was innovated because the organization has been unable to obtain tribal funding for a building, Cox said. All money received will be contributed to the association's building fund, he added.

"It's an opportunity for all Creeks to work together to help us get a building and promote the Mvsko language as well," Cox said.

Cox said he would like to thank the Creek Nation communications department for providing technical assistance recording the tapes.

Individuals interested in making a donation and obtaining tapes may send a money order to: Oklahoma City (Muscogee) Creek Association, P.O. Box 19892, Oklahoma City, OK 73144-0892. Cox said money order transactions are preferred.

Seniors vote to keep gift shop open

OKMULGEE — After informal appeals by Muscogee (Creek) Nation tribal complex employees, the senior citizens of Okmulgee Indian Community voted in favor of keeping their giftshop open.

The elders made the decision at a Dec. 30 meeting. The group had voted to close the shop, located in the tribal complex, in an Oct. 28 meeting. The original decision to close was made because shop guidelines set by the seniors' guidelines committee were not being followed sufficiently, secretary Mary Thames said. Thames said there was a "lack of an adequate bookkeeping system."

Thames said she believes many elders were influenced to vote in favor of keeping the store open after tribal employees informally approached elders - requesting it remain open. Basically, the elders believe the store has been a good service to its patrons, she said.

Housing authority offers septic tank monitoring

OKMULGEE — In an effort to prevent and/or reduce costly repairs and as a service to homebuyers, the Creek Nation Housing Authority is conducting a survey of mutual help homebuyers who would like to participate in a monitoring system of septic tank and lateral line cleaning service. Responsibility to clean septic tank and lateral lines remains with the homeowner).

The total cost for this service will be approximately $150. The homebuyer can make arrangements to authorize this service and add the cost to their monthly payments. Minimum payment is $12 with a maximum payment of $25 per month for a one-year period.

If the homebuyer does not know when lines and tank were last cleaned, it is suggested they do so as a preventive measure to ensure against future problems with the septic system. If the system has been cleaned in the last year, they do not need to have the system cleaned out.

Participants can contact Eugene Thomas at the housing authority at 756-8504 or toll-free at 1-800-259-5050.

said. "We now can redesign and develop organizational structure, including management, to serve the tribe's best interests."

Though only in the planning stages and limited for now to BIA programs, LaGrone said the tribe is part of a national scene which includes the participating tribes seeking one working agreement with the federal government.

"The tribes [will be] negotiating one agreement with the U.S. for all the programs," LaGrone said. "Essentially, the [tribes'] agreement will be a treaty for all federal programs to be controlled by the tribes."

LaGrone said that Indian Health Service and the U.S. Department of Labor are also making provisions for self-governance. He said the next step in the process is to educate people about self-governance.

"We will be educating communities, the National Council, and all decision-making bodies, informing them as to what self-governance is about and what it can do for the tribe," LaGrone said.

Fife says time for tribe to move ahead

Creek chief says transition over in state of nation address

OKMULGEE — Muscogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief Bill Fife said the tribe must focus on stronger and more effective government in his state of the nation address.

The speech, mandated by the tribal constitution, was delivered to the National Council Jan. 30.

In his address, Fife said 1992 was a time of transition from an old way to a new philosophy of governing.

Fife also called for broad-based leadership from tribal members to meet future challenges.

"It is my philosophy that we must have a broad based leadership in order to be stronger and ready to meet challenges which threaten the existence of the Creek Nation as we know it," Fife said.

Specifically, Fife cited his 1993 priorities as: resolving the sometimes tense relations between the tribe and Oklahoma government; building Creek leadership; developing a Creek economy; and promoting community development.

Fife said he is committed to fighting the state's challenges to tribal sovereignty, especially in the areas of gaming, taxation, and tobacco sales.

Though pledging tribal resources to resist Oklahoma challenges to sovereignty, Fife appealed to "all levels" of tribal membership for leadership to "resolve our dilemma with the state government, the federal government, and other foes of the Creek Nation.

"Whether you are a community officer, a tribal town leader, an employee of the community, or the Creek Nation, we all have contributions to make," Fife said.

Fife said he will set his administration's priorities for revenue management and expenditures and called for expanding the tribe's revenue base from one of bingo and tobacco taxation to a more diverse revenue base.

"It's extremely important that we devise a system which determines how our tribal wealth is produced, distributed, and consumed," Fife said.

Fife noted that Creek money leaves the tribe and stimulates the non-Indian community. He called for more individual entrepreneurship, but said the tribe should develop an economy that involves Creeks in every segment of the economy.

Fife's list of 1992 accomplishments

- $1.1 million grant for tribal development building
- completing housing needs assessment resulting in a $5 million housing rehab grant
- contracting of Johnson O'Malley program from the state
- completing the Creek Nation random sampling survey of quality and quantity of services
- settlement of Indian Health Service lawsuit
- building of Muskogee bingo hall
- signing the juvenile and family codes into law
- assisting natural disaster victims
- signing elder and adult protection codes and criminal and traffic codes into law
- facilitating ceremonial tribal leaders meeting
- introduction of planning for self-governance

National Council speaker wrangles cattle and politics

by Kathryn Bell, Muscogee (Creek) National Council

BRISTOW—Clarence Cloud, speaker of the Muscogee (Creek) National Council, is not only known for his legislative role with the Creek tribe, but is also widely known in this area as a successful rancher and breeder of Hereford Horned cattle.

Speaker Cloud, who presides over the 31-member National Council, is owner and operator of "Cloud Five," a 400-acre ranch in Creek County, near Bristow.

The ranch, on land that Cloud inherited from his father's 80-acre allotment, has been progressively expanded since 1957 and has been successful with its Hereford cattle breeding operation.

Today, Cloud runs his ranch with the aid of his wife, Lou, and sons Mark and Rodney. Getting started in ranching was a natural for Cloud. He remarked on the lifetime occupation. "I love working cattle and everything that goes with it. I was raised in the rural area and like most people raised in this setting I enjoy the simple and natural lifestyle it provides. It makes me feel close to creation and the Creator."

Cloud, in talking about the transition of his cattle operation to registered Hereford cattle, gave credit to Hereford breeding greats like the late Doc Watson and Slim Taylor. He attributes their advice with helping make his ranch a success in Hereford breeding. "These Hereford experts, Doc Watson and his ranch manager Slim Taylor, who still lives on and manages the legendary Watson Ranch in Morris, and others like Gary Shaw — all have had the best performance Hereford herds in the U.S. over the years."

With his traditional belief in stewardship of the land, a shrewd business sense, and "a lot of help and advice" from others in the Hereford cattle industry, the elder statesman turned "Cloud Five" into a moneymaking enterprise which has enjoyed a rare longevity in the industry. In spite of the many market fluctuations, and natural occurrences — drought years, cattle disease, Cloud Five survived. "A real low point for the ranch eight years ago

Second chief attends Clinton inauguration, national meeting

by Shelly Crow, second chief

To the citizens of the great Muscogee (Creek) Nation, I would like to express my gratitude for your support this first year in office as your second chief.

It has been an awarding experience to serve; you have been very patient in allowing me to adapt to my new role.

There is not a school for second chiefs and many of you have had to bear with me in orientating this new position to full-time that which was once a part-time position.

I recently attended the National Congress of American Indians and the presidential inauguration. Everyone present had the same vision that our principal chief, myself, and the National Council had a year ago for the future of our nation.

Our chief has asked for unity among the ceremonial grounds, churches, and respect for all Muscogee people's beliefs. He also wants unity among the executive branch, National Council, and the judicial branch in order to serve our people. Chief Fife promoted that there be no power struggles within his administration.

This administration encourages economic development, free enterprise for citizens, and self growth. Decentralizing the government to the people is the key for progress in all areas of the Muscogee Nation.

President Clinton is promoting this type of government. The inaugural message was only 14 minutes, but quality, not quantity, was communicated about his pledge to citizens of this country.

His message to all of us was that we must take responsibility to "break the bad habit of expecting something for nothing, from our government or each other. Let us take more responsibility not only for ourselves and our families, but for our communities and our country."

Other presidents have made similar statements. President Kennedy stated "Ask not what your country can do for you. Ask what you can do for your country."

President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated "We must be willing to sacrifice for the good of a common discipline, because without such discipline no progress is made, no leadership becomes effective."

With the renewal of spirit in this country and hopefully a new administration, the Indian Nations across these United States will be honored as nations with the respect shown to foreign nations across the world by the federal government.

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, spoke at the NCAI meeting. He gave the American Indian hope under the new administration that President Clinton will appoint a U.S. Secretary of Interior and assistant secretary that will be an advocate of the American Indian instead of an advisory. He announced that the Secretary of the Interior had made the following statement: "Indian trust responsibility should be the

Councilman wants younger people hired

Editor:

This is an open letter to the 30,000 Creek citizens, but especially for young adults with small children.

I suppose the reason many of you don't have a job — and send your children to school without welfare assistance — is because we hire retired people to work for the tribe when they can live on Social Security and retirement checks.

Okmulgee Indian Community has just hired two employees — both retired. Out of 92 applicants wanting a job, we hired two retired people.

Constituents, I can't do it all for you. You are going to have to help me. If you want a job, you have to start complaining and help me.

There are too many unemployed young people with families to feed and too many retired people working 40-hour week jobs.

Last year was my most rewarding year that I can remember. It has been a privilege and an honor to serve the citizens of the Okmulgee District. Our present administration is working toward a brighter and more prosperous future involving economic development, health care, and all programs for our people. I hope we can take President Lincoln's advice and have a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Thank you all.

Tribal citizen commends council member

Editor:

I am writing this letter to commend Okmulgee District representative Charlie Litsey — not only for the causes that he speaks up for — but because he has the guts to do so. I wish we had more council members like him.

I heard a council representative remark that the tribal council isn't social workers, but lawmakers. One council member remarked, "you can't save the world, Charlie." I heard another representative say, "I'll offer my opinion, but what's an opinion — it's like an elbow, everyone has one." Well, I'd like to say to council members who think in this manner — how about making a commitment to a cause? We have several problems within the tribal government — take your pick.

Not all council members share this attitude; I know we have other good council members who are putting forth an effort. Charlie Litsey — hang in there. There are a lot of good tribal citizens who appreciate your endeavors.

Editor:

We have travelled a long, hard road to find a miracle for our daughter Tiffany. Our daughter has been sick for the past five years. We live in Nebraska and have travelled throughout Kansas and to Colorado to find help from medical doctors.

We found nothing but heartache and no results. The doctors never could tell us what was wrong with our daughter. Finally they put her on a vegetables-only diet.

She had dark circles under her eyes and would not

Tulsa District voting in special election to fill Council vacancy

TULSA — Four Creek citizens are vying for a National Council seat left vacant when Tulsa District representative Jerry Wilson resigned from office to accept the position of tribal executive director.

Wilson resigned from office in December; he was also the Council's second speaker.

Vying for the seat are: Stephen Bruner, Broken Arrow; Ed Moore, Tulsa; Carol Morris, Tulsa; and Donna Rhodes, Glenpool.

Unregistered Tulsa District citizens may register at the tribal election board office in the tribal capitol complex, located at U.S. Highway 75 and loop 56. The deadline date to register for precinct voting is 5 p.m., Feb. 10.

The general election is Feb. 20. Precincts are: Tulsa Creek Indian Community Center, 6363 E. 31st, Suite 105; and Glenpool Creek Indian Community Center, 13839 S. Casper Road or one block north of U.S. Highway 75 and 141st St. Polls are open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. If necessary, a primary election will be held April 3.

The candidates

Candidate: Bim Stephen Bruner

Church: First United Methodist, Broken Arrow

Clan: Bear

Education-experience: Broken Arrow High School; associate's degree in police science, Tulsa Junior College; 120 hours of college credit from the University of Tulsa, Northeastern State University, and the University of Oklahoma; U.S. Army veteran; Tulsa Police Department canine training; Tulsa Police Department veteran; have served on various boards of youth programs; manager of store operations, Native American Trading Co., Inc.

Reason for seeking office: I am aggressively seeking office because I am uniquely qualified to sit on any decision-making body. I can make sound, rational, and progressive decisions. My educational background and unique life experience have given me a strong desire to see that everyone is treated fairly and honestly.

I will not be out-worked in research. I have no hidden agenda. I am not angry at anyone. I am not a single-issue candidate. I will vote for items that I truly feel will benefit the entire tribe.

I am not anyone's puppet. I am a free thinker. I owe no political favors and nothing is owed me. I am for a sound, stable economic base.

I am not a professional politician nor do I desire to be one. I am a direct product of Indian assistance programs. I am better off today because other Indian people took the time and [made an] effort to assist me. It is time to repay these hard working people. I can help accomplish that goal by being elected to the National Council.

Candidate: Edwin Moore

Personal: 52; son of Edwin Sr. and Sallie Beaver Moore; wife, Linda; four sons; one daughter, and two stepdaughters

Church: Big Cussetah United Methodist Church

Tribal town: Cussetah

Reason for seeking office: For the Creek Nation to advance, it is of the utmost importance to support education programs that develop occupational skills — be it vocational-technical, higher education, or apprentice training.

I am willing to protect the sovereignty of Creek Nation. I am a strong supporter for improving the health and welfare of the Creek people. I will always work for the best interest of Creek Nation and its tribal members.

Moore

Candidate: Carol Asbury Morris

Personal: 52; daughter of Joe and Lillie Lewis Asbury

Church: Arbeka Baptist

Tribal town: Kialegee; has taken medicine at Arbeka Ceremonial Ground

Clan: Bear

Education-experience: associate's degree, Del Mar College; earned additional college credit at Corpus Christi State University; Tulsa Creek Indian Community Treasurer; and employed with the City of Tulsa Urban Development Department

Reason for seeking office: Tulsa Creek and Yuchi citizens are in need of representation that I want to provide. For example, the cost of living in a city such as Tulsa is much greater than some of our other communities. Our retired and elderly are requiring more services as each day passes.

I feel that modern society is pushing our young people away from their traditions and culture. Today's work place is requiring higher education than our citizens can get because of the high costs of a college education. Education is a must for our people. I support educational opportunities for all citizens.

Tulsa Creek citizens have many needs that I feel are being neglected. I would like the opportunity to represent you. Mvto.

Candidate: Donna Rhodes

Personal: 49; daughter of Jesse and the late Margaret Alexander Freeman

Reason for seeking office:

I am seeking office for two reasons. My experience and my knowledge of tribal government qualify me. I have an extensive knowledge of the internal workings of tribal government as well as an active involvement in the Indian community. This will ensure you better representation in your tribe. Please look over my experience and vote for me a qualified representative.

I will support stronger education, community development job development, health programs, economic programs and cultural programs.

highest responsibility of the interior department."

There was an atmosphere of unity, happiness, and encouragement that all Americans were waiting to hear all over Washington D.C.

After arriving back in Oklahoma, I immediately ran into a minority of people who stated negative things about the new president.

I began to remember what my father, a master sergeant who served in the European Theater, told me about negative people and gossip. He said that he always respected his commanding officers and that in the way of the military you do not have time to gossip in order to accomplish your goals of survival and winning the war.

May we pray to the Creator to bless our new president to lead us into a better world for all people.

As a nation within a nation let us continue to pray for tribal leaders to work with the new president to improve relationships with the federal government.

I would also like to salute our elders who have served this nation under the leadership of several presidents and tribal leaders.

One of these elders is my grandfather, Joe Beaver, an original allottee and full-blood Creek, born Feb. 22, 1901.

Happy birthday, gramps, and I thank you for your leadership and blessing on me to serve our citizens.

gain weight. Some days she would not have the energy to even walk, so we would have to carry her. As a last resort, the doctors placed her in a behavioral hospital.

That's when we decided we had to look for something that would not hurt her and have lasting effects on her health. We contacted a fellow tribal member who gave us the contact for the miracle. You have the miracle in your medicine man Dave Lewis. We have our daughter back after everyone else had given up hope.

She is gaining weight and has the energy which we thought we would never see again. One thing Lewis could give us, that no medical doctor could, was the caring and the goodness of his heart. People can't believe the difference in our daughter. Please don't wait until all hope is given up — see your medicine man first. We are a much stronger family now.

Okmulgee man takes exception with government Editor:

According to recent publications in the local media, the Okmulgee County Commissioners are venturing out into administration of a $350,000 housing rehabilitation grant program through the Deep Fork Community Action and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Affairs, the Oklahoma Department of Commerce, and the Eastern Oklahoma Development District.

Before applications are submitted, I would suggest that these same elected county commissioners do a bit of legal homework or seek advice from a competent attorney (if possible). We continue hearing about the infamous $205,000 someone apparently lost and the demand for recovery of the $400,000 loan to Heatherly Mining, Inc. seems to be neglected.

In addition, they may want to seek a second legal opinion relative to the April 29, 1991 taxpayer request for the recovery of some $5.39 million in public funds before moving into uncharted territory.

My opinion is that before taking up this new business, they should make an attempt at the recovery of the $105,000 burden attached to our ad valorem, in 1977, when the Okmulgee Chamber of Commerce defaulted on their Southside Industrial Park loan agreement.

At least somebody should make public the required citizen participation plan. I do not believe the public would have permitted the $60,000 land donation to Creek Nation if ordinary citizens would have been allowed to participate in what our governmental officers were doing for our benefit in 1981.

Wasn't that land to have been the site for a community building? What happened to that project? James Burruss, Okmulgee was the drought that we suffered for five years — it eliminated a lot of good cattlemen because they had to sell at a low market — they just couldn't survive it, but we did." He added, "also, when Bang's disease was taking it's toll in the cattle industry, the ranch was the only one in Creek County that tested Bang's-free."

A life time member of the American Hereford Association, Cloud said he has had the satisfaction of having bred good cattle that have, in turn, satisfied his buyers and the stockyards. "I have purchased cattle from the best ranches — like: Watson, in Morris; Hammertree, in Hanna; Turner, in Sulphur; and Wildhorse Ranch, in Boynton — for the purposes of updating my herd for breeding. I have also sold cattle to Creek tribal members."

Educated at Chilocco Indian School, Cloud retired from the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers after 35 years as a licensed electrician in 1981. He served as president of the Tulsa Local 584 for six years and was on the executive board for four years. He remarked that the milestone of his career as an electrician was when he organized a retirement club for retired electricians in Tulsa. "They still invite me to their dinners," he said.

Involvement with the Creek Nation has been a subject close to the rancher's heart, as it provided an opportunity to work for and among his people. Cloud is Creek and Yuchi. His father was David Cloud, full-blood Creek-Yuchi, and his mother was Minnie Scott, seven-eighths Creek, of Weleetka.

"I became involved with the tribe 16 years ago through the Creek Nation Rodeo Club and then I was appointed by the chief to the housing board and later to the Supreme Court," he said. Cloud had served on the Council for 12 years when he was elected Council speaker last year.

The future of the tribe, Cloud feels, is good because of Chief Fife's economic policy.

"We are looking at several viable economic development projects and there is a good possibility we can put many of our people to work. We also have plans to develop our tribally held lands for further economic growth," he said.

Cloud commended the cooperative spirit that now exists between the Council and the administration. "We, the National Council, and the administration are now working closely and cooperatively together to make a better future for all Creek people."

A typical day for the 72-year-old rancher-statesman, includes rising early to mind the day's business at Cloud Five Ranch. He is then off to the capitol complex, in Okmulgee, where he will spend the majority of each weekday.

At the end of the day he returns to the ranch where the "simple pleasures" provide him with a sense of perspective that keeps his life in balance.

Fife said the tribe's role is significant in chartered Creek community development. He noted that his administration assisted tribal communities in developing management systems for greater accountability and organizational stability also.

Creeks' agreement with Choctaws awarded first contract

Contract puts tribe on "cutting edge"

OKMULGEE — A joint tribal venture has been awarded a contract for the manufacturing and assembly of cable machines for a super collider project.

Choctaw-Creek Technologies, a joint venture between the Mississippi Band of Choctaws and the Muscogee (Creek) Nation, has been awarded a contract to manufacture and assemble two cable measuring machines for the superconducting supercollider project near Waxahachie, Texas. The contract has a total value of $156,000 with an option to purchase four additional cable measuring systems worth $296,000.

Principal chief Bill Fife signed the agreement with Choctaw chief Phillip Martin Feb. 16 in Washington D.C.

"The Creek Nation is fortunate enough to have such a capable partner in Chief Martin and the Mississippi Choctaws," Fife said. "Out of this venture will emerge a viable enterprise positively affecting our local economies as well as providing high technology jobs. We envision this as a major step toward tribal self-sufficiency."

The business arrangement between the two tribes is one of the first of its kind.

"The Creek Nation is one of the most progressive tribes in America, along with the Mississippi Choctaws," said Jerry Wilson, Creek Nation executive director. "For the two of us to combine resources will improve the quality of life for our tribal members. Our joint venture will also serve as a national model for other tribes."

Wilson said that chief Fife wants the Creek Nation to get in on the "cutting edge of technology."

"Chief Fife knows that if this tribe is to meet the demands and needs of the people, we must keep up with current technology," Wilson said. "Manufacturing components for the super collider project is certainly in step with the chief's goals for the Creek Nation."

There have been some calls to Washington D.C. for the president to cease funding the collider project, but Wilson believes the project will continue to be funded.

The Creeks enter the joint venture through its Muscogee (Creek) Nation Manufacturing Enterprises. The Choctaws operate Choctaw Manufacturing Enterprises.

Muscogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief Bill Fife accepted awards from the Alliance of Indigenous Peoples of Oklahoma and the University of Oklahoma for the tribe's support of sovereignty. "Sovereignty is not negotiable," Fife said. "This award reflects the leadership that the National Council and this administration has shown in maintaining our sovereign status against state pressure." The award from the university is signed by 140 students and instructors commending the tribe for 500 years of resistance. The awards were presented at the Amnesty International Conference in Tulsa held in February.

Tribe opens Holdenville bingo hall

HOLDENVILLE — They're playing high stakes bingo in the Hughes-Seminole district.

The grand opening of Creek Nation Holdenville Bingo was Feb 13. On hand were Creek chief Bill Fife and several tribal officials.

The Holdenville facility is the third one to be operated by the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Gaming Operations Authority Board. The tribe is expected to open its fourth bingo hall in Muskogee this spring. The board has oversight responsibility for the Tulsa and Okmulgee bingo operations. The tribe also licenses community-operated facilities in Bristow, Checotah, and Eufaula.

"The chief is pleased to bring employment opportunities to the Hughes District," said Jerry Wilson, the tribe's executive director. "Not only are we generating income for the tribe and the community, we're bringing a service to the Holdenville market."

Wilson said the Holdenville hall offers an entertainment alternative in the Hughes-Seminole District.

"Obviously, a market for entertainment exists there. This has been a long time coming. People can now participate in a comfortable environment doing something they can enjoy," Wilson said.

The Holdenville hall, located in the remodeled community center at 416 E. Poplar, seats 300. Sessions are available to area bingo players on Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays.

"This project was a cooperative effort that was initiated through a request by the Holdenville Indian Community board, supported by the National Council, and the gaming operations authority board," Wilson said.

"We're very pleased that the gaming operations authority board assumed this additional management responsibility," Wilson said. "They've been doing a great job managing our bingo halls."

Gaming board members are Ken Childers, Rocky McIntosh, and Sonny O'Hern. Joe Fox is the hall's temporary manager. He will assume the manager's position at the Muskogee hall when it opens.

Doors open at 5 p.m. with games starting at 6 p.m. The regular session begins at 7 p.m. Megabingo games, broadcast by Gamma International, Ltd. from the Tulsa bingo hall, became available to Holdenville March 6.

Wilson said he would be very pleased if a tribal citizen won the million dollar payout for megabingo.

"I think it's very significant that people can now play for $1 million at Holdenville. Satellite technology is giving us that capability," Wilson said.

The facility employs 20.

Wilson added that the experience of establishing the Holdenville bingo hall can lead to other profit-making ventures.

Okmulgee rep wants better attendance

Editor:

Last week, we voted on some very important bills with nine Council representatives being absent.

Where are these Council representatives that are supposed to be supporting the people? These meetings are very important.

One vote for the people could make a big difference. These representatives get paid regardless if they attend a meeting or not. Why should they care?

Remember, all Council seats will be open in 1994. Check your list and don't forget to vote in the next election.

Citizen agrees with Litsey

Editor:

I agree with Charlie Litsey. Let the retired stay retired and give the younger men a chance.

I have a grandson who has tried for two years to get a job at the Creek complex or something related. He is Creek with a high school diploma, but, alas, no college degree. And someone thinks that makes the difference. He has repeatedly been told to come back later. That doesn't put money in his pocket, buy him food, or allow him rent money. Again, it's who you know that makes the difference!

Thanks to Santa Claus, the clothing allowance was great, and greatly appreciated.

Juvenile accused of murder writes

Editor:

My name is Robert W. Mitchell. I am a Creek-Seminole Indian. At the age of 15, I was accused of murder in the first-degree — a crime I didn't commit, but the judicial system says I did.

At the time I'm writing this I'm at home. There was a time in the last three and one-half months I was unable to say that. The Christmas present I prayed for this past year was just to be home.

When I turned 16, I was sitting in a lonely cold cell at a juvenile detention center in McAlester, a suspect. From Sept. 4 to Dec. 23, my life was not my own. Being a teenager, it is not the life I wanted, but because of the court system and law enforcement, I lost my freedom. At the time of my arrest I was scared and angry. I knew I wasn't guilty, so I felt the judge and district attorney would let me go, but that wasn't so. It was unbelievable. I was taken away from my family.

During the time I was held in the detention center was another experience. You weren't allowed to talk to the other kids. You weren't allowed to go to the bathroom alone, or even take a shower. A visit from two family members was limited to 15 minutes a week. Phone calls were limited to five minutes and were monitored. At times I would feel angry and hatred at the people who put me there. I felt that they only looked at me as a teenager in trouble and being Indian. When watching TV our eyes had to be on the set at all times.

During my course of detention, I went through different court hearings. I was brought to the courthouse with leg shackles on, a chain around my waist, and handcuffed. The police officers didn't care if I was innocent, that was their rules. I kept hoping the judge would release me and know that I was innocent, but it wasn't so. The district attorney tried to put me in prison for life without parole, and I didn't understand why. The only time I felt justice on my side was when I was certified as a juvenile.

I'm home now, but that's not the end of my story. I'm still waiting to go to trial. I'm only home because the appeals court upheld a statute for juveniles. It states a juvenile cannot be held in detention over 90 days if they have not been "adjudicated of delinquency or disposition in their case." Only through my experience have I learned a lot about the judicial system the hard and painful way.

Teenagers, it's not fun. I thank my God for answering prayers. I'm very lucky to have a loving grandma and parents who supported me all the way. The belief in me from relatives and friends kept me strong. A special thanks to the churches who prayed for me and gave encouraging words to my grandma, dad and step-mom. A special thanks to all of those who helped me and my family and for looking into my case and for being at my court hearings.

Citizen takes exception with procedure

Editor:

Recently I met Lisa Tiger, daughter of the late Jerome Tiger. She was speaking with students about her travels around the country to educate young people about AIDS. As I listened to her, I began to wonder what type of funding she receives from Creek Nation in her efforts to educate our youth. She told me Creek Nation offered her a job, but she was unable to except, because she wants to educate the people. In doing so, this requires her to travel extensively.

If Creek Nation is willing to give Lisa a job, why not still fund her with her efforts. She didn't take the job, so what? What Lisa is doing takes a large amount of courage, time, and money. This issue is very important especially in this day and age.

And from what I've learned and the research I've done, funding has always been a problem with Creek Nation. Funding is difficult, even for our people who are representing the tribe. Creek Nation hasn't always funded our representatives. For example, when we choose a young lady to represent us as our honored Creek princess, one would think that all expenses would be paid by the tribe — especially when she travels to other Indian happenings or events. But that's not the case with our tribe. In some cases the Creek princess had to foot her own bill for lodging. Is this how we treat our own people? But I'm sure there are more cases of non-funding of our representatives, if I were to do more research. But I'm not looking to embarrass the Council or princess committee — they seem to be doing a good job by themselves.

If we as a people are to be proud of our tribe, our leaders must learn the old values of our forefathers — to take care of our own elders and meet the unique needs of our people first. Sure some of these values are there, but they aren't always practiced.

But as I wrote before, what Lisa is doing takes courage. I just hope and pray that our Council will find that same courage to make funding available for Lisa and others. I understand that most of the corruption was caused by the Claude Cox administration and there were numerous changes made. I'll just put it all in the hands of our Creator. I know with hard prayer good things can happen with our new Fife administration.

Remember — don't wait until it's too late to help Lisa with her goal. Lisa is giving us a gift, a gift of learning. This gift can be very beneficial to our young people.

Mark Berryhill, Lawrence, Kan.

Editor's note: There is no comment on personnel matters. The past princess committee was given the responsibility of overseeing the activities of the Creek Nation Princess in 1989.

At that time, the committee established the following travel guidelines for the princess: 1) all travel will be approved by the committee; 2) per diem will be given to the princess according to federal travel guidelines; 3) the need for a chaperone will be made on the nature of the event and the age of the princess; 4) a travel schedule will be provided of the events which the princess is expected to attend; 5) mileage will be given at .24 per mile (or at the current federal regulation.) Mileage will begin at the tribal complex to the event and back to the complex; and 6) any unscheduled travel must be approved by the committee. If approved, the princess will receive a reimbursement.

The princess was required to submit completed mileage vouchers. Funding for the yearly expense of the princess was provided through budgeted funds from the Creek Nation Festival Committee. Festival funds were appropriated from the National Council.

Muskogee Council member crowned queen

• Muskogee Indian Community members Lee and Helen Chupco were recently crowned Muskogee Indian Community Valentine's king and queen.

Community members presented the couple with a Western Sizzlin gift certificate. Mrs. Chupco is also a Muskogee District representative to the National Council.

The festivity participants were entertained with songs sang by Homemade Quartet. Reporter Naomi Thompson said the community center was decorated with Valentines and pictures of the community's elder members. Elderly nutrition program cooks Lucille Squirrel and Lela Bella presented gifts to the center decorators.

• Thompson reported that the community Christmas dinner was enjoyed by all attending. Mary Ankrom, Mary and Jeanna Barnett decorated the center with Christmas decorations. The community expressed its appreciation by honoring them with gifts. The nutrition program cooks were presented with cash gifts from community members.

• Thompson said the elders are appreciative of meals prepared by Squirrel and Bella. "There are two special ladies putting out tasty meals. [They cook everything] from country cooking to Indian tacos. [The] only thing missing is sofke, tomfolo or kanachi."

Thompson reported that Indians of all blood quantum and tribes have been participating in the nutrition program since it opened over a year ago. She said the elders have a unique "chow line" system. Mary Barnett serves as "chow line deputy." Thompson said Barnett has a system in which numbers are utilized. She calls out numbers and those sitting at tables with corresponding numbers line up accordingly. Barnett also is aided by a hand siren which helps her indicate lunch is ready. "[The] first time it sounded, we all thought a police car drove inside. I held up my arms, thinking they caught up with me," Thompson joked.

Elders who weren't familiar with the system got "out of line," Thompson said. "But the deputy stood on her two feet acting tougher than an army sergeant."

• Thompson also reported Mrs. Chupco has been teaching basket making classes. Community member and tribal community services director Harley Little received a "big A" for three baskets he made, she said.

Okmulgee smokeshop holds opening celebration

• The community will be holding a followup membership meeting during its regular March 8 meeting. Grocery bingo will be held following the meeting.

• The Marshall family will be holding a wild onion dinner at the community center from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., March 13. The cost is $4 for adults and $2 for children. Additional wild onions will be for sale. The benefit dinner will help fund the Marshall family reunion. The center is located one quarter of a mile east of U.S. Highway 75 and loop 56.

• In early March, Hale reported the officers began holding community constitution amendment meetings. Hale said the officers plan to seek technical assistance from Steve Landsberry, tribal community organization department manager.

Wetumka elders tour Seminole museum

• Wetumka Indian Community elders recently toured the Seminole Nation Museum.

Eleven elders participated in the excursion.

• Thirty Wetumka High School and junior high Indian club students held a Valentine's party at the center in early February.

Principal chief says tribe making impact on state, local economy

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Creating a major economic impact in eastern Oklahoma is the Muscogee (Creek) Nation.

With an annual budget over $70 million, the Creek Nation is the leading economic booster in Okmulgee through its various programs designed to help the lives of its 35,000 Creek citizens and the lives of non-Indians in the area.

"Our tribal budget is $70 million, which economists would estimate has a $280 million impact on the regional economy," said principal chief Bill Fife.

The Creek Nation also has a direct bearing on the lives of non-Creeks through its various programs in health, education, social welfare, law enforcement, and in the improvements in rural lifestyle.

One major effect the Creek Nation has had in the total community is the operation of the Creek Nation Community Hospital.

The Creek Nation leases and operates the hospital to serve the city of Okemah and Okfuskee County, as well as Creek Nation citizens. It is one of the remaining few rural hospitals in Oklahoma.

Employment of Creeks and non-Creeks at the hospital create an economic boost to the total community.

Another way the Creek Nation is making an impact in the total community is the road building project, which has helped the counties within the Creek Nation in their road building and maintenance programs.

"We hope to have $3 million for road projects for the area, which will benefit Creek citizens and everyone who uses the rural roads," said the tribe's executive director Jerry Wilson. "We are able to help lift the financial burdens of the county commissioners through this program."

Wilson said plans are in the process to form rural fire protection programs throughout the Creek Nation.

"With this program we will be able to provide fire protection which will lower the insurance costs of all homes in those areas," Wilson said. "This is just another example of how the Creek Nation is benefitting all people."

The National Council of the Creek Nation recently approved a $25,000 grant to the community of Yeager to help obtain matching federal funds for a fire station and community center. This marked the first time the tribe has offered assistance to a rural community with a large Creek population.

Wilson also cited the federal funds public schools receive because of Indian children attending those schools.

Through the federal impact aid and Johnson-O'Malley program, public schools are able to purchase equipment and other needs that will help Indian and non-Indian students," Wilson said. "Schools would not get those needed supplies and equipment if it were not for Indian students."

Through the social programs offered for Creek citizens, the budget load of state agencies is lessened, Wilson said.

Law enforcement is another example of how the Creek Nation helps its own people and all people living within the nation.

"Because we have a well trained police force, we are able to help other law enforcement agencies and relieve some of the burdens they face in manpower," Wilson said.

Besides social programs, the Creek Nation provides the No. 1 tourism attraction in eastern Oklahoma.

"The No. 1 attraction in Tulsa and Okmulgee is the Creek Nation Bingo,"

Second chief Crow serving tribe, Indians on presidential health care reform task force

by Jim Meyers

reprinted from Tulsa World

WASHINGTON D.C. — It was something of a historic moment and Shelly Crow certainly made the most of it.

Crow, second chief of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation and a nurse on the teaching staff of the University of Tulsa, was on Memorial Bridge last Jan. 17 along with thousands of other Americans participating in then President-elect Clinton's bell-ringing ceremony.

She met soon-to-be first lady Hillary Clinton.

"I gave her my card and told her I was a nurse," the 45-year-old Crow recalls.

"I said I was interested in women's health issues. Women, infants, and children are my specialty."

She said that during their brief conversation Mrs. Clinton told Crow to write her, and Crow did, sending along a resume that outlines her extensive background in Indian health issues.

A few weeks later, she received a phone call and today Crow is one of 50 special consultants working with Clinton's task force charged with hammering out a new national health plan.

"I was kind of shocked," she said. "I wasn't endorsed by anyone."

In fact, Crow said no one from Oklahoma was even asked to the task force.

"I just think it was meant to be," she said.

Crow said that since her appointment everyone has been extremely supportive, including Oklahoma Gov. David Walters, Muscogee Principal Chief Bill Fife, TU officials, her husband, and two children.

With the task force's 100-day deadline set by the president, Crow said she and

Tribal official responds to negative editorial

by Noah Long

Jerry Wilson, Muscogee (Creek) Nation Executive Director, said a recent editorial blasting a tribal proposal for car tags and an editorial cartoon stereotyping the facial features of an Indian are obvious signs of prejudice and racism against American Indians.

The Tulsa World's editorial said the car tag proposal would be "...at the expense of Oklahoma school children. Money plunked down for a cheap Indian tag is money denied an already thin state education budget."

The editorial also stated that Creek children attend "...state-supported schools, they benefit from state-supported medical care and they drive on tax-supported roads, among many other things."

Wilson said the statements were "ignorant."

"Attempting to place blame on Indian tribes for the quality of education in Oklahoma is ignorant," Wilson said. "Contending that our right to exercise sovereignty comes at the expense of school children is, at best, irresponsible."

Wilson said the Oklahoma Tax Commission has no authority to make decisions regarding Indian businesses.

"The tax commission should concentrate its efforts on duties assigned to it by the state legislature," Wilson said. "The U.S. Congress is the only entity that can regulate Indian commerce."

Wilson said the Tulsa World is also wrong to blame Indian tribes for the thin education budget.

"It has been the oil companies that have raped Oklahoma education," Wilson said. "Very few have ever attempted to hold the oil moguls accountable for their role in the quality of Oklahoma education."

Wilson noted that millions of dollars in federal funds are returned to Oklahoma schools because of Indians attending state-supported schools through the Johnson O'Malley and Title V programs.

Wilson said Okemah-area residents are benefitting because the Creek Nation Community Hospital is managed and operated by the tribe.

The Tulsa World also stated, "It's too bad the court has to waste its time on such nonsense."

Wilson said federal courts are the only place for Indian tribes to receive equal protection within the law.

"The American judicial system is exactly where we need to take Indian issues," Wilson said. "As long as Oklahoma's Indian policy continues to be developed from ignorance, seeking redress in federal court will remain an option this tribe will utilize."

"If the Oklahoma Tax Commission respected the law regarding tribal enterprise, there wouldn't have been any court cases."

Wilson noted that Oklahoma history scholars have documented facts regarding fraud and swindles

Okmulgee Indian Club says mvto

Editor:

We wish to express our appreciation to Creek Nation Communities for the support the Okmulgee High School Indian Club has received in their fundraising efforts to go to Washington, D.C. Mvto to the Creek National Council, Creek Nation Okmulgee Bingo, Creek Nation tula Bingo, Okmulgee Indian Community, and Sonic Drive-In. We appreciate the donation from Councilman Harvey Gilroy also. Thank you for buying our breakfast burritos, Indian tacos, buying our garage sale items, and letting us wash your cars.

Through this trip, American history came alive to the students as they saw their legislators in action on Capitol Hill. At the Smithsonian Institute, we saw the past and present of the American Indian. It is hoped that this trip will result in future Indian lawyers, senators, and representatives. Again, we say, thank you.

Chief Fife and Mr. Cloud:

I am writing to tell you how grateful we are to the Muscogee Nation for the important work that Shelly Crow is doing as a member of the working group on the President's Health Care Task Force. Her contribution in helping us insure the health care needs of Native Americans will be properly considered, as we develop this important initiative, is greatly appreciated. I know your people are proud of her wonderful contribution to this effort. The nation is proud of her.

With best wishes to all of you.

Principal Chief Bill Fife:

I have the pleasure to inform you that I have been appointed minister for cultural affairs of the embassy of Mexico.

The new headquarters of the cultural section are now located at: Mexican Cultural Institute, 2929 16th St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20009, phone: (202) 728-1628; fax, (202) 462-7241.

I am pleased to inform you that we have identified an expert on the Muscogee in Mexico, her name is: Paulina Del Moral, Av. Presidente Carranza 894 Pte., 2700 Torre'on, Coahuila, Mexico, phone: 011 (52) 17 16-1829.

According to the research of Del Moral, in the summer of 1850 three tribes fled from the United States, to a town in the border state of Coahuila. The three tribes that sought refuge in Mexico were the Seminoles, led by Wildcat, the Kikapu (Kickapoos), led by Papikua, and the Muscogees, led by John Horse.

To this day, descendants of these three groups still live in Mexico.

Records show that the three tribes were originally assigned an area called El Remolino on the banks of the San Antonio and San Rodrigo rivers. But instead of settling there, they chose the nearby area called La Navaja.

The land grant of El Nacimiento given to the three tribes in 1852 was eventually expanded and was decreed in 1940 as ejido lands by President Lazaro Cardenas.

At present there are approximately 60 Muscogee families in El Nacimiento. About five miles away, some 60 Kikapu families live in Ranchera. It is difficult to keep an accurate count because both groups are still migratory.

Today these two groups are unique in that the government of Mexico recognizes their autonomy within Mexico. They have their own civil authorities and have total rights over their land and water.

I would suggest you approach directly Del Moral for future reference.

I hope this information is useful.

Our current ambassador, his excellency Jorge Montano, is very interested in developing relationships with minority groups. If tribal officials are ever in Washington, D.C., we would be very pleased to receive them at the Mexican Cultural Institute and explore the possibility of developing joint cultural and educational ventures. Until then, receive my cordial regards.

Manuel Casio, Washington D.C.

Indian chamber of commerce to host business rendezvous

TULSA — The American Indian Chamber of Commerce is looking for Indian businesses who want to grow and make money. The Indian chamber, in its second full year, has 80 businesses and is heading membership drive.

Chamber members are from throughout the area and represent a large variety of businesses — environmental consulting firms, advertising-marketing agencies, construction, architecture, answering service, music stores, bingo halls, and a tribe.

Members receive benefits such as a directory which is mailed to corporate entities and buyers, meetings which offer various speakers, and a group which works on issues which affect Indian businesses.

The chamber is now preparing for its second Indian business trade show, "Business Rendezvous '93," April 16 at Tulsa Technology Center.

Dannette Russell, chamber officer, said the trade show is unique in that only businesses which are 51 percent Indian owned can display their products and services.

The first year was a success and the turnout is expected to be even better this year. Chamber members submit lists of who they would like to do business with — invitations are then sent to purchasing agents, buyers, and corporate entities based on their input.

Booth spaces are offered to chamber members at a reduced fee of $20, then opened as available to non-member Indian-owned businesses for $50.

Any Indian business owner interested in joining the chamber may join and also reserve their booth space for the show. If booth space is available, the fee for non-members is $50.00.

For information on the American Indian Chamber of Commerce or any of its activities, call (918) 664-6211 or (918) 492-9639.

Bruner wins special election for Tulsa District representative

OKMULGEE — Bim Stephen Bruner outpolled Donna F. Rhodes in a special election for Tulsa District Seat D for the Muscogee (Creek) National Council.

The 31-member National Council is the tribe's legislative body.

Bruner polled 314 votes, while Rhodes received 162 votes in the runoff election. Seat D covers the Tulsa and Glenpool area of the Creek Nation. He is one of six Tulsa District representatives.

The 43-year-old manager of store operations for the Native American Trading Co. in Tulsa, will take office April 24 at the monthly meeting of the National Council.

Bruner assumes the seat vacated by Jerry Wilson who was appointed executive director of the tribe.

"It was a great election," Bruner said after his victory. "The election board told me it was one of the better turnouts in the history of voting in this area and that shows if the people turnout and vote — just what they can do."

Bruner said his campaign was based on getting information to the people.

"I pushed that I would get information out as quick as I could," Bruner said. "There is a lot of frustration out there among the people who don't know what's going on and what's available to them."

Bruner said he plans to publish a newsletter for his district as one way of informing the people of Creek Nation services.

The runoff election was necessary after the Feb. 20 election failed to give any of the four candidates a majority.

In that election, Bruner polled 225, Rhodes polled 126, while two other candidates, Edwin Moore, had 62 and Carol Asbury Morris, 40.

In a breakdown of the election results, Bruner outpolled Rhodes, a former National Council representative, 95 to 40 in Tulsa, 65 to 40 in Glenpool, and 154 to 87 in absentee ballots.

Creek college students learn unique trade

OKMULGEE — Shannon Brown and Shannon Miller not only share the same first name, but they also share the determination to complete their education at Oklahoma State University-Okmulgee.

Both students are nearing the completion of achieving their associate's degree in saddle and boot making after much hard work and in overcoming some difficult situations that could have hampered their progress.

For Brown, a Creek citizen, his only regret about attending OSU-Okmulgee was that he waited two years before enrolling in the program.

"I received a scholarship when I was in high school at Liberty Mounds, but I waited a couple of years before enrolling," he said.

But his interest in saddle and boot making continued to build within him.

"Before I enrolled in school, I would come in here and just hang around and watch everybody making things," Brown said. "I couldn't get away from here, so I just decided this is what I should do."

With the help of his instructor, Mike Dewitt, he landed a summer job in a shoe repair store in Stillwater. That was enough to sell him in the business.

"There are only two shoe repair stores in Stillwater and the owner of the one I worked at said he might sell me his business when he retires," Brown said.

Miller is a mother of three children, yet she was able to reach her goal of completing her course of study in saddle and boot making. Although she has two trimesters to go, she already has a job awaiting her when she completes her program of study at OSU-Okmulgee.

"Tell the mothers that don't think they can be a mother and a student at the same time, that they can do it," Miller said when asked if her children hampered her.

Miller said her ability in making handcrafts led her to study saddle and boot making, a program offered only at OSU-Okmulgee.

Brown has a 3.7 grade point average and like Miller, both are considered good, hard working students by their instructors.

"They're both good hard working students with a lot of ambition," said instructor Linda Tallent.

Brown, Miller

"Both students are doing real good," Dewitt said of the two Indian students. "Both are enjoyable to be around. They have good attitudes and have good work ethics."

Dewitt's instruction to Brown hasn't gone unnoticed by the Hectorville resident.

"My goal is to be as good a boot and shoe repairman as Mike Dewitt is," Brown said.

Brown's own ambition to succeed can be traced to his father, Otis Brown.

"My dad impressed upon me not to sit back and wait for someone to hand me something," Brown said. "I'm proud of my Indian heritage. I hope I can be an example to an Indian child to set a goal and stick to it."

It appears the two students are becoming that type of example.

Creek Marine Corps captain presents officer's sword to tribe

by Stephanie Berryhill

OKMULGEE — Hoping his Marine Corp officer's sword will be an inspiration to Creek youth, Captain Kenneth R. Davis presented it to the Muscogee (Creek) Nation in March.

As he believes he is the only Creek officer in the U.S. Marine Corp, Davis hopes it will be displayed as a constant reminder of what can be achieved through hard work and education.

"It's my personal gift to the Muscogee (Creek) Indian Nation [from] one of theirs that has accomplished. It's a symbolic gift of pride and respect that I have for my people."

As Antitank Platoon Commander, 8th Tank Battalion, in support of the 2d Battalion, 2d Marine Regiment, attached to the 6th Marine Regiment, 2d Marine Oivision, he was awarded with the Bronze Star Medal for heroic service from Feb. 24 through 28, 1991 in Operation Desert Storm.

Berryhill, Davis

By contributing his sword, he hopes it will be an inspiration to Creek youth, as the fighting spirit of the Redstick warriors inspired him during battle. In honor of his Mvskoke ancestors, he wore a small, red painted oak stick on a cord around his neck daily.

Oavis said he would like to see the tribe found a Redstick society recognizing citizens who have honorably served in the U.S. military. In the event it is instituted, Davis said it should be retroactive to include such heroes as World War II Col. Ernest Childers, a Medal of Honor recipient.

The Marine Corp officially presented Davis with the Bronze Star Medal Aug. 4, 1992. Representing the Muscogee Nation was National Council Representative Thomas Berryhill.

Currently, Davis is the commanding officer of Battery "K," 4th Battalion, 14th Marine Regiment, 4th Marine Oivision (Reserve) in Huntsville, Ala. He resides in Nashville, Tenn. with his wife, Filena deLos Angeles Morales, and their two children, Matthew Menawa and Angelica Mercedes. He is the great-grandson of Hugh Henry, original Creek allottee and founder of the city of Henryetta.

Original allottee invaluable source of history, knowledge

by Stephanie Berryhill

OKMULGEE — At 93 years old, original allottee Polly Miller Homma has a mind sharper than most adults one-third of her age.

An invaluable source of local history, folklore, and information, she can recall — with great detail — events and memories that occurred in her life well over 80 years ago.

Homma celebrated her 93rd birthday recently. She was born northwest of Okmulgee to Steven and Effa Berryhill Miller Feb. 18, 1900.

She is a life-long member of Newtown United Methodist Church and their oldest living member. Homma belongs to the Wind Clan and Concharty Tribal Town.

The secret to her astute mind — “I don’t know; when people ask me things I answer them right off, I don’t know where I keep it (knowledge). Sometimes when I get sick I forget things, but I never do forget the old-timers.”

Homma recalls the era when Newtown was called Tvlofv Mucvse. “No one could say Tvlofv Mucvse, so they turn around and say English.”

She remembers the day the church received electricity and the hub bub it stirred among the church women around 1910.

Church member Stella Hanes had married non-Indian Tennessee native Porter Cox, whose physical appearance and dress was of great curiosity to the children. He was an electrician by trade and offered to provide electrical service to Tvlofv Mucvse. Most women were in favor of it, as the children often burned themselves by coming in contact with the wood burning stoves. But one elder church mother, reluctant to give up her wood stove, protested and said she would not stand for it.

When the day came for the church vote upon the electricity issue, she was the first to jump up in support of it, Homma said. The woman’s daughter exclaimed, “But mama, I thought you didn’t want it,” and she replied, “Well, I changed my mind.”

Homma was born paralyzed on the right side of her body. As a little girl, she would sit on the porch of her grandmother Peggy Berryhill’s camphouse, longing to climb trees and play with the other children. They did not want her around; being partially crippled she could not walk very well and often had to be picked up when she fell down.

Ironically, she has outlived most of her peers despite never having been physically healthy. She reasons that being being confined to her home, she didn’t physically exert and abuse her body as much as her healthy peers had the opportunity to do.

“One thing, all the life I live, look like I wasn’t away. I couldn’t go away from my mother cause she was always there to pick me up when I fall.”

Women visiting her mother’s camphouse would say to her, “Why don’t you go play with those other kids? Children aren’t supposed to hang around their mama.” But I was quiet and didn’t say anything, neither did mama. She didn’t take up for me.”

Because the other children rejected her attempts to play with them, Homma occupied her childhood years listening to the adults’ conversations. She contends her ability to listen is why she is so knowledgeable. “That’s how come I know so much about contributed by Kelly Tiger Jr.

HOLDENVILLE — Family and friends filled Tuckabutchee Methodist Church March 7 to celebrate the 90th birthday of fullblood, original allottee Nancy Harjo Beaver.

The church listened attentively as Beaver talked about the long life God has blessed her with and her Christian faith. She said the prayers she offers daily during the morning, noon, and night — combined with her love and concern for loved ones and friends — has sustained her through 90 years. Now in her elderly years, she leans on the Lord for strength and assurance of someday seeing the many loved ones who have departed from this walk of life. Beaver also commented on the old Mvkoke hymn “Estofvn Ayarhaks?” and its meaning to her.

The celebration coincided with the church’s second Sunday church service. The morning sermon was delivered by Beaver’s son-in-law, elder Kelly Tiger Sr. of Hilltop Presbyterian Church, Wewoka. After singing “Happy Birthday” to Beaver, dinner was served with an abundance of traditional Mvskoek foods. A birthday cake was then served to the birthday party attendees.

The afternoon was filled with the singing of many hymns. Sermons of tribute were delivered by: Rev. Houston Tiger, Sand Creek Eufaula Baptist; Rev. Robert Kernal Sr., Wewoka Hilltop; Rev. George Bruner, Tallahassee Methodist; and Rev. Joe Tiger, host pastor.

The morning message was taken from Efesvike 6:1-3: “1. Hopuetake, ce’ckviken em vpohicvks, Pucase ofvn, heyvt fvcct omekv.

2. C’erken hvtvm ce’cken vrakkuecvs, mvt vhakv temfvccetv ocat enhvteceskv tes.

3. Cen hervren, momet hofunen ekvvnv oh vretskvret.” Beaver was born March 3, 1903 to Rev. Lilla and Rhoda Scott Harjo. Her maternal grandparents are the late Louisa and Yaholargee Scott. Paternal grandparents are the late Spokogee and Lindy Chupco Harjo. Beaver is knowledgeable of her family history, which has been recorded by her grandson, Kelly Tiger Jr.

Upon the death of her mother and remarriage of her father, Beaver, along with her brother, was reared by her grandma Harjo and uncles, Sunday, Cheparney, Thompson, and Edmund Harjo.

She married John Beaver, son of George and Polly Stidham Beaver in 1927. Mr. Beaver died in 1938, leaving her to raise their five children; the late John Jr.; Wanda; Eugene; Cora; and Norean.

She was baptized in 1905 at Little Wewoka United Methodist Church where her mother and her uncle, Rev. James Scott, were members. She joined Salt Creek United Methodist Church in March of 1920 and was accepted by Middie Waddie. She joined the United Methodist Church’s Ladies Home Aid Society, now known as the United Methodist Women. She is also active in the Northeast District Senior Methodist’s organization, previously known as the Retired Minister’s organization. She strongly supported the organization on behalf of her brother, the late Rev. Alfred Harjo, and continues to support the senior’s organization currently.

As the oldest member of Salt Creek, Nancy has been a church mother and second women’s leader for over 20 years.

As Nancy is the eldest of a huge family of relatives, it seems fitting that she has inherited the role of family matriarch from her grandma Harjo, who was a pillar of strength over 50 years ago.

Beaver expressed her gratitude to those with enough love and respect to attend the occasion. She said “mvto” to those who sent cards, offered telephone greetings, and visited during the week of her birthday. She will never forget this wonderful occasion.

Governor picks Eufaula mayor

EUFULA — Oklahoma Gov. David Walters has appointed Eufaula mayor Joe Johnson to serve as vice-chairman of the community empowerment group, along with thirty of what the governor termed as the brightest minds in the state. "We have asked some of the best people in their fields to serve," Walters said.

Johnson, who is also chief justice of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Supreme Court, is serving his 18th year as mayor. He has served 16 years on the Oklahoma Municipal League Board of Directors, as well as being its president for two terms. He is the first mayor in the history of the 75-year-old organization to be elected to consecutive terms. The league serves 400 cities and towns in Oklahoma. Johnson was selected as mayor of the year, receiving the George Nigh Award in 1992.

Creek leads area health service

PORTLAND, Ore. — James R. Floyd, Creek, has been appointed director of the Portland area Indian Health Service. The announcement of Floyd's appointment was made in December by Dr. Everett R. Rhoades, director of the Indian Health Service.

Previous to his position at the Portland IHS, Floyd was employed by the Muscogee (Creek) Nation as a health system's specialist in the community health representatives program. In 1989 he became associate director of area operations which included finance, personnel, planning, environmental health, contracting, alcohol treatment, and tribal operations departments.

Floyd received his bachelor's degree in health care administration from Northeastern State University in Tahlequah and his master's in public administration from Portland State University. Additionally, he is a graduate of the executive program in managed care from the University of Missouri, Kansas City.

people and the church."

When she was young, Tvlofv Mucvse church members would camp and hold services from Wednesday through Monday morning. Services were held on Wednesdays and Thursdays, she said. The members fasted on Fridays; on Saturdays, they went into town to purchase food goods. "They had all Indian food - tvklik tokse, sofke, spare ribs, all kinds of hominy, grape dump-lings. They had all kinds of food; they never lacked for nothing. We were well fed children."

Mondays were reserved for discussing church business and holding "forgiving" services in which children were not allowed to attend. She re-counted the story of two ad-versaries who had made a com-mitment to forgiving each other during one Monday morning service. The two women were brought to the front of the church by the pastor. One woman, instead of forgiving the other, had hidden a stick under her apron, pulled it out and hit the other woman over the head. "Boy they had a battle. The church was just small, box size. The church was falling down and every-body coming up. The old ones couldn't [physically] hold everyone up. They had a great battle in that church and there was no more forgiving; it was worse than ever." Homma believes the church has changed drastically — for better and worse — since she was a child. She contends the length of campmeetings and services are getting shorter and shorter. Just after the turn of the century, up to a dozen camphouses re-sided on the church ground, full of life. The construction of the church's fellowship hall marked the end of its family-occupied camphouse tradition. Homma misses those days, but thinks some changes are for the good. When the fellowship hall was constructed, the ex-pense involved in upkeeping and feeding at individual camps was no longer economically feasible, she said.

Though bedfast she still de-rives strength from God and her Christian faith. "When the Lord wants you to know some-thing he tells you — in a dream or a whisper — he gives you that feeling. I'm always laying here with [that] wonderful feel-ing."

Although Homma lives alone, her small home is al-ways buzzing with friends, relatives, and home health nurses who constantly come to visit and check on her.

"I always said I never will go to the nursing home. I'm never sorry for myself or lone-some. I love to visit — people just come and go. I know many people and I'm always glad to see them come and when that person leaves, someone else comes. I'm just happy. I'm glad that God let me live this long."

Crow to influence national health care reform policy

the other 500 or so people involved in the process have been working seven days a week. Initially, she said they were discouraged from having any contact with the press, but that is changing.

"Now, I think Mrs. Clinton and the task force see the need to really go ahead and educate the public and discuss the task force," Crow said.

"I basically can talk a little about the task force. We are looking at a better-managed health care system. Billions are being spent on health care, but not all Americans are getting health care."

As to specific options, she remained reticent, saying task force leaders did not want to emphasize one item over another at this point in the process.

"The real neat thing is they have received thousands of letters," Crow said. "I knew they would, but I didn't realize they would read them. We are really listening to the American public. Some are sending in good ideas."

She said Mrs. Clinton, appointed to head the task force by her husband, remains extremely involved in the day-to-day process. When Mrs. Clinton was forced to cancel a speech to college nursing officials here on Tuesday, her staff asked Crow to step in for the first lady.

She expressed hope her presence during the closed door meeting will focus more attention on Oklahoma and its Indian population.

"I think Oklahoma is very unique," she said referring to the 1980's, which saw a depressed economy wipe away much of the progress the state had made in health care.

"Our state has really been hit hard by financial cuts."

In addition, Crow said, Oklahoma's Indian population, the largest of any state, brings an added perspective. Her role on the Clinton health care reform task force is not the first time Crow became involved in health issues on the national level.

During the Reagan administration, again following a letter on the issue, she was appointed as the only minority to his first national AIDS task force. Later, Crow developed an AIDS prevention program for the homeless in Tulsa.

The first woman to be elected to an executive office of the tribe, Crow has a bachelor's degree in nursing from Northeastern State University in Tahlequah and a master's degree from the University of Oklahoma. In 1992, Walters appointed her to the Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission.

against Creeks over land and mineral rights; inheritances were perpetrated by prominent Oklahoma families.

"The Tulsa World should at least realize that Creeks pay millions and millions of dollars in taxes — contributing to local, state, and federal tax revenues. All over the Creek Nation, our citizens are mailing their tax payments," Wilson said. "Creeks are not seeking state tax exemptions. My ancestors paid my taxes with the loss of their homes and their lives in Georgia, Alabama, and other parts of the southeastern United States and were forced to walk several thousands of miles to Indian Territory; the relationship with the federal government is regulated by laws and treaties and Oklahoma is not a melting pot, but rather a culturally diverse society.

"It is too much to expect the World to relent its racist position, but objectivity should be observed."

Creek tribe making significant impact on economy

Wilson said. "There are several hundred people coming each night to go to the bingo halls in Okmulgee, Eufaula, Holdenville — and soon in Muskogee."

Wilson said the tribe is able to create strong tourism dollars for those communities because of the investments the Creeks put into building the bingo halls.

Tourists also flock to Okmulgee to see the tribal leaders and visit the historic places of the Creek Nation. Wilson said international visitors often stop in at the tribal headquarters to visit with the chief and other leaders. The tribe also wants to create Creek-owned businesses.

"We must diversify our income production base," chief Fife said. "In addition we must close the loop in our fragmented economy where on payday when Creeks cash their checks, the money leaves Creek hands and goes directly into the non-Indian community."

"We need successful individually Creek owned enterprises — grocery stores, clothing establishments, restaurants, etc. where Creeks will trade and in turn stimulate our own economy," Fife said.

The Creek Nation also has 24 chartered communities throughout the eight-county reservation that provides various projects for Creeks and non-Creeks in those communities. Of the 24 communities, 19 have facilities to hold their programs, such as day care for all citizens, cattle projects, language classes and smoke shop enterprises.

"The reason we are working diligently with our communities is because it promotes development and leadership locally," Fife said. "The strength of our tribe is built by the breadth and depth of our capabilities at not only the central level, but the local area as well. As our communities become more capable, we as a tribe become more capable."

In serving all Creek citizens, Fife said 13,000 were served through the Indian Child Welfare program, classroom training, higher education, home energy assistance, and commodity food service. In addition, more than 8,000 receive The Muscogee Nation News monthly; the radio program reaches more than 13,500 listeners. The citizenship office enrolled 1,964 Creeks and the election board registered 11,269 voters last year.

The Creek Nation has 826 employees, of which half work at the tribal offices in Okmulgee and the remainder are employed at the hospital, clinics, and bingo halls.

The average salary of the employees is $16,400 with a mean age of 37 and an average of 4.2 years of service. Nearly 12 percent of its employees have a bachelor's degree or higher, with the majority (70 percent) possessing a high school diploma. Ninety percent of the employees are Creek, eight percent are of other tribes, and one percent are non-Indian.

"A strong Creek Nation cannot neglect the concerns and aspirations of its tribal members," Fife said. "The welfare of the deprived, the health care of the needy, and the education of all citizens is the goal of the Creek Nation — for we are not developing this nation for a select few. Our $70 million budget means little if we do not use it to expand the opportunities of all Creek people."

Tribe files federal suit against governor, tax commission

OKMULGEE—The Muscogee (Creek) Nation filed suit against Oklahoma Gov. David Walters and the Oklahoma Tax Commission late last week.

The suit in U.S. Western District Court is a response to six Oklahoma State Highway Patrol troopers and a tax commission official that held a command post near Duck Creek Indian Community, in attempt to seize tobacco products. On April 21, a trooper trespassing onto tribal property was asked to leave by a Lighthouse administration officer.

Duck Creek is a tribally chartered community and operates on trust land owned by the Muscogee Nation.

"The actions of the tax commission are a clear violation of the U.S. Constitution, the Indian Commerce Clause, as well as the inherent sovereign powers of the Muscogee (Creek) government," said principal chief Bill Fife. "Additionally, this action is a violation of a U.S.

Supreme Court ruling in the Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Citizen Band Potawatomi that prohibits state officials from entering tribal trust property."

In its petition, the tribe contends that treaty rights and other federal laws prohibit the state of Oklahoma from any regulation of tribal business.

"We are turning to the courts of the United States government for protection of our constitutional and treaty rights," Fife said. "The state is violating the Indian Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution, attacking tribal jurisdiction," Fife said.

The petition also alleges that "by virtue of the treaties, statutes, and court decisions" that tribal lands and enterprises are exempt from the taxing, criminal, civil jurisdiction. Additionally, the Muscogee constitution approved by the U.S. governments pursuant to a federal act, provides all properties of the tribe, real and personal, are exempt from federal and state taxation when not inconsistent with federal law.

Fife contends that the political jurisdiction of the tribe is as it appeared in 1900 and was recognized and approved by the U.S. Department of Interior in 1979.

"By now, it should be clear, that the Muscogee Nation has a right to sell tobacco products to its citizens," Fife said. "Instead, we are being harassed and our freedom threatened." Fife stressed that the tax commission and other state officials have misplaced priorities.

"This tribe has created over 300 jobs because of our tobacco sales. Many of those jobs are in rural areas the state has

Principal chief working on bureau reorganization task force

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Muscogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief Bill Fife is playing a major role in the reorganization of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Fife was appointed to the task by then-Secretary of Interior Manuel Lujan and was reappointed by new secretary Bruce Babbitt. The task force was organized in 1990 by former U.S. President George Bush to restructure the BIA.

"We want the BIA to be more responsive to the needs of the Indian tribes," Fife said of the task force's main responsibility.

Fife is one of three tribal leaders from the Muskogee Area BIA on the national task force. Three leaders from each of the 12 area offices are on the national task force for a total of 36 tribal leaders and seven federal representatives from the Department of the Interior.

Joining Fife on the task force from the Muskogee area are Bill Follis, Madoes chief and Greg Pyle, Choctaw Nation assistant chief. The three leaders represent the 14 tribes and three tribal towns within the Muskogee area office.

Under the presidential charter, the task force has already restructured two area offices. The first to re-organize was the Sacramento area office.

The reorganization came after the BIA submitted its own plan — the blue book. The proposal was submitted by the assistant secretary of Indian affairs Sept. 20, 1990 and presented to a meeting of tribal leaders in Albuquerque, N.M. Sept. 28, 1990.

The nearly 1,200 tribal leaders reacted quickly against the BIA's plan and called upon congress and the secretary of interior to allow tribal input into the reorganization.

"The task force told the BIA to reorganize to our needs and not the BIA's," Fife said. "We want to streamline and increase the flexibility of programs."

With the support of the secretary of the interior, the task force has the power to stop any reorganization or restructuring the BIA might try to implement.

"They can't make any moves until the task force reviews their plans," Fife said.

The task force met for the first time on January 22, 1991 and has now met 17 times. Public hearings were also held to solicit input into the reorganization plan.

Each area office is expected to restructure according to the wishes of the task force and tribal leaders within their jurisdiction.

"The Muskogee area office director, Merritt Youngdeer, has been receptive to the task force," Fife said.

Currently, the Muskogee area office is leaning toward the "technical assistance-modified center" plan, which allows the BIA to keep certain services to the 17 tribes in the area.

Those would include the individual Indian money (IIM) accounts, for individual Indians revenues and services to tribes that have not contracted programs under provisions of P.L. 93-638.

Indian people who have property and assets in trust would continue to be served by the BIA.

Although most of the 17 tribes within the area have at least one P.L. 93-638 contract, the BIA would serve those tribes and Indian people without 638 contracts.

Several organizational changes recommended by the task force are in the implementation process within the BIA. These are the establishment of an office of economic development, an Indian gaming management staff organization, and modification of the organizational structure of the office of trust funds management.

The trust funds management is also being reviewed by the secretary of interior.

The reorganization task force will continue to meet and offer suggestions to the BIA until December 1994. However, Fife expects the secretary of interior to continue the task force beyond 1994 — until all BIA offices are restructured.

"This is a multi-phased process and we're doing this step-by-step because once it's done, that will be it."

Human development adds Coser

OKMULGEE — Pete Coser has come home to his people.

Coser has joined the Muscogee (Creek) Nation as the deputy director of human development, announced director Abe McIntosh.

An Okmulgee native, Coser has served as the senior counselor with minority programs and university counseling services at Oklahoma State University since 1985. He will specialize in developing the educational needs of the Creek Nation in his new position.

Coser is on leave from OSU to work for the Creek Nation during its developmental stages of improving the tribal educational programs within the division.

"I believe we all have to make a contribution to the tribe and I want to do what I can," Coser said about assuming his new role.

Coser has spent 21 years in education since graduating from Southeastern Oklahoma State University. He received his doctorate in 1985 from the University of Arkansas. His teaching career began at Dallas Independent School District in 1972. He has also been with school systems at Dickson, Plainview, Tulsa, Rogers State College, and has served as the director of Indian education with Tahlequah Public Schools before earning his doctorate.

"I liked dealing with students on a one-to-one basis and I still like it," he said of his counseling career with Native American students. But, his return to the Creek Nation is a dream he never thought could happen.

"The main reason I took this opportunity was because of chief [Bill] Fife and Jerry Wilson," Coser said. "I think a lot of those two men. I consider them statesmen. They made an impression on me that when they asked me to join the staff I had to consider it."

Coser said he accepted the position with a certain amount of risk involved because of the security he had at OSU.

"You have to take risks," he said. "I think this administration is like the Bill Clinton administration in that it is a new generation that is beginning to contribute to the tribe."

Coser hopes to contribute to preserving tribal sovereignty.

"I've been associated with several other tribes and many of them have been impressed with the stance of the Creek Nation in the sovereignty issue against the state," Coser said. "We can be as strong as we want to be and this administration is approaching this issue very well."

Coser is the son of the late George and Stella Coser, long standing Okmulgee area leaders.

Tribe approves resolution to change health system

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — America's health care reform as it affects Indian health care prompted the Muscogee (Creek) Nation to approve a resolution calling for seven steps to change the existing system.

The resolution, which was approved by the National Council on April 27, was presented to President Bill Clinton by Ed Mouss, director of the Creek Nation health services administration, for his consideration in the national health care reform proposal.

Mouss presented White House officials a proposal entitled "Indian Health Care Reform Proposal" as a model of structural change to the existing health care system as it impacts the Indian health delivery system.

The seven steps include: the elimination of barriers caused by employment; the right to choose own doctor; improving accessibility to health care; simplifying the system process for the consumer; enhancing the comprehensive health delivery system; enhancing the principles of self-government; and decentralizing Indian health as a function of government.

In the elimination of barriers caused by employment, the resolution calls for the "security of knowing that [Indians] will have health coverage even if they seek employment away from their tribal homeland" or have a pre-existing condition.

A choice of a doctor, health plans, and the opportunity to pick a coverage were also noted in the resolution.

In improving the accessibility of health care, the resolution says tribal citizens need a benefits package and that tribal governments have the ability to provide facilities for comprehensive care.

Also called for in the resolution is the need to reduce paperwork for both the doctor and patient and to provide continuity by keeping the best of the current system.

Tribal housing authority meeting basic need through service

OKMULGEE — Years ago communal living was a way of life for the Muscogee people.

Today there is still the opportunity for a modern day type of communal living within the Muscogee (Creek) Nation through the Creek Nation Housing Authority. The housing authority has developed housing units that provide closer contact among Muscogee people.

Today's communal living style affords Creek people the opportunity to learn from one another in the housing authority complexes built to house Indian families throughout the Creek Nation.

That concept has created a new outlook in the housing authority. There's a new director, Joe Jackson, and a deputy director, Ann Hancock. Both have been in their present positions since March, 1991, though Hancock has worked several years for the authority. A new spirit of commitment and dedication is present. The attitude is evidenced in the 47 employees.

Also, the authority is now seeking new programs and funding aggressively.

Additionally, a new board was seated last year. It consists of: Ken Childers, chair; Senora Hayes; Joe July; Thomas McIntosh; and Morris O'Hearn.

The authority holds open meetings the first Tuesday of each month. The group of professionals have also been busy developing new programs for Creek citizens. The housing authority was successful in obtaining a large grant to be spent over a five-year period to rehabilitate and improve housing units within the service area of the Muscogee Nation.

It has constructed over 1,400 units and is servicing approximately 4,200 individuals. The authority also operates low-rent apartment complexes consisting of over 364 units throughout the Creek Nation.

Jackson said the authority has proposed funding for 500 more homes to be built through the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The new homes represent the number of applications on hand for new homes. Although Jackson is doubtful HUD would grant that many projects, he is hopeful at least 150 could be funded.

Jackson emphasized that only HUD, the federal agency, can fund new homes.

The figure is not unrealistic, according to a recent survey conducted by the tribal environmental services administration, with support from the housing authority.

The latest housing survey of the Creek Nation revealed 6,899 families are in need of housing, while 6,231 are living in sub-standard housing, and another 6,030 homes are in need of renovation.

The housing survey was completed in 1993 and is the latest since a 1985 survey.

The survey also revealed over 1,300 individuals are living with extended families or friends.

Jackson said many people think the housing authority has a budget in place to build new homes right away. But the federal fund-

OKMULGEE — Home for David and Atha Mosco used to be on Tiger Mountain without electricity and water.

Today the couple and their two daughters live in a three bedroom house on north Mission Drive, thanks to the Creek Nation Housing Authority.

"I never believed I would ever live in a house like this," she said of the home she's lived in since the summer of 1990. "This is 100 percent better than the house we used to live in on Tiger Mountain."

The Moscos' home is one of approximately 75 homes acquired by the Creek Nation Housing Authority since 1990. Through the acquisition program, the Moscos' house was purchased below the market value of $38,000 by the authority.

The Moscos are one example of how the housing authority enables a young couple to become homebuyers and homeowners.

"I didn't believe we would be able to buy a home this soon," Mr. Mosco said of home ownership through the Creek Nation Housing Authority.

The Moscos were on the waiting list for over a year and-a-half before they were called.

"My grandpa and my girlfriend both told me they got Indian homes through the housing authority, so I applied," she said. "But, I was surprised when they showed this house to us."

She said her girlfriend and grandpa were both surprised when they saw the new home. "They got [kind of] mad we got this house and they had the smaller houses built for them," Atha said.

In the acquisition homes purchased by the housing authority the applicants must come up with the $1,500 down payment and then make monthly payments amounting to 15 percent of their adjusted income.

Joe Jackson, housing authority director, said they would like to purchase more acquisition houses in other counties, but homes are not always available for purchase within their price range that meet federal guidelines.

"We have purchased houses in Okmulgee, Bristow, Okemah, Glenpool, Eufaula, Sapulpa, and Muskogee," Jackson said. "[Housing and Urban Development] has set the criteria of what we can buy."

The Moscos are just one family that became homeowners sooner than they expected. They show their appreciation by fulfilling their obligation of making their monthly payments, and improving and maintaining their home.

"This is what makes this job meaningful," Jackson said. "They're appreciative of their home."

ing agency (HUD) determines how many houses will be built each year. The housing authority must determine which applicants will receive the new houses.

The housing authority also is in competition with housing authorities throughout the nation.

"HUD issues their funding based on management, how well housing payments are made, and the need," Jackson said. "So, it's important for each homeowner to fulfill their responsibility in making their monthly payment."

Jackson said how well Creek Nation homeowners make their payments has a direct impact on how much funding will be received for new homes. Jackson said most homeowners shouldn't have much trouble meeting their monthly payments because of the low minimum amount required.

"The minimum payment the authority allows is $36 per month, which covers insurance and taxes with the remainder going to administrative costs," Jackson said. The amount of monthly payments is 15 percent of the homeowners' adjusted income. The average monthly payment is $97. The average length of payoff is 25 years at $36 per month. Jackson said its minimum monthly payment is the lowest of any housing authority in the state. "The higher amount of payments allows the home owner a quicker time in acquiring a deed to the home, which is around 16 to 17 years," he said.

One problem the authority has is establishing the understanding that home owners are responsible for maintenance of their homes.

"Because we are a federal home ownership program, it does not allow us to do maintenance on the homes," Jackson said. "All funding is from HUD and no tribal [money is] involved."

Jackson said the authority works closely with the tribal administration in defining the direction it will take.

Two directions the authority hopes to pursue are a youth sports and drug elimination program through a new HUD funding program. If the authority is successful in obtaining the funds, facilities such as tennis courts, basketball courts, and playing fields could be built.

The drug elimination program could provide a facility for counseling programs, secuity, and other resources.

The authority's apartment complexes are ideal for the implementation of such programs.

Individuals who wish to apply for a mutual help home should apply at the housing authority. The application is reviewed and verified by a housing counselor and submitted for approval to the authority's administration. After approval the applicant is placed on a waiting list until new housing units are awarded by HUD. Counselors also make referrals to other agencies who provide social and other types of housing assistance.

Three area Johnson O'Malley Indian education programs among state's best

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) Nation began administering the Johnson O'Malley program October 1992. The program director is Ken Taryole. The JOM program is within the division of human services. Abe McIntosh is the division director.

The following three programs have been identified as exemplary.

Wagoner program is JOM model

WAGONER — With Oklahoma's only contained classroom, the Johnson-O'Malley program in the Wagoner School District is a model for other programs.

The contained classroom, which provides cultural awareness and enrichment programs to Indian and non-Indian students, has been in existence for four years in the Wagoner School system, said Joyce Bear, director of the JOM program.

"We have a fulltime teacher and over 350 students a year participate," Bear said of the JOM classroom. "We meet everyday with four classes a day.

"It's an elective for an 11-week period where students rotate from physical education and vocal music to the enrichment program, so every student in the 5th and 6th grade have the opportunity for the class."

Gloria Gibson is the teacher in the cultural enrichment classroom. She has been called innovative for her teaching skills and subject matters. She covers everything culturally from basket making to an awareness of the environment.

The Wagoner project hasn't gone unnoticed by the Indian education community either.

Bear and her staff were invited to make a presentation at the Indian Education Expo at the University of Oklahoma in April. And, they were named winners at the region III art show.

Last year two students from the program were state winners to the national history day contest, held in Washington, D.C.

"We have good community involvement in our program from the entire community," Bear said. She noted that the Masonic Lodge in Wagoner helped the JOM programs raise funds to send the two students to the national contest in Washington.

"We have a very active parents' committee and that's what makes this program go," Bear said.

In addition to the contained classroom, a tutoring program is available to the students. Classroom supplies and the salary of the teacher and staff are totally from JOM and Title V funds, which frees the school system from funding the Indian education program.

"We are self-supporting," Bear said. "We don't distract from the curriculum, we add to it."

The Indian education program serves the 400 Native American students from the six schools in Wagoner. The JOM program serves 20 percent of the Indian enrollment while Title V serves 44 percent of the Native American students, which accounts for the combination of the two programs.

"We would like to think we have the best Indian education program in the state," Bear said.

Sapulpa Public Schools

SAPULPA — For 17 years the Johnson-O'Malley program has been funding tutors for Indian students.

Because of that program the graduation rate for Indian students at Sapulpa has increased, said director Dwight Pickering.

The tutoring program and the cultural awareness enrichment program are made possible through the JOM funds. Five tutors are provided for the 400 students in grades kindergarten to the fifth grade. The instructional tutors are assigned to each of the five elementary schools in Sapulpa.

The tutoring program operates from Monday to Thursday, while the cultural awareness program is provided on Fridays.

"Because we are able to tutor at the early level, the students are better prepared at the middle school and secondary levels," Pickering said. "The students are able to understand the basics through the tutoring program."

Pickering said the Sapulpa School District provides tutors on the middle and high school levels, but his program also oversees that when Indian students are involved.

The cooperation the JOM program has with the teachers in the school system has helped identify students who need the special tutoring. The teachers are aware of the needs of the Indian students and are also aware of the help available through the Indian education department.

"The goals of our tutoring program has been very good," Pickering said. "We're able to graduate more Indian students today than we did 10 years ago. That's our goal."

Ryal Public Schools

RYAL — Small schools are known for providing one-on-one care with students. The Ryal School is an example of just that.

Through the Johnson-O'Malley Program, the 62 Indian students in the Ryal School receive free tutoring and individualized instruction.

"We work with the students on an individual basis and it does a world of good for them," said Louis Hicks, superintendent of the Ryal School. "The more knowledgeable the student is, the more self-worth they have about themselves."

Janet Taylor has been on the JOM program staff since 1973 and is the prime reason for the success of the program, Hicks said.

Besides providing tutoring services, the program also provides additional help in "interest areas" for Indian students.

"If we have a student that has an interest in art, then we sit down with that student and help in whatever way for the student to continue in exploring that opportunity."

Creek education leaders seek education opportunities with Oklahoma State University

by Debra Basore, OSU News Bureau

STILLWATER — Tribal leaders from the Creek Nation met recently with Oklahoma State University officials to discuss future partnerships between OSU and the tribal governments.

"Leaders from both nations are interested in obtaining our expertise in tribal management, health care and distance learning," said Dr. Greg Washington, OSU Vice President of Multicultural Affairs.

Tribal officials were told educational opportunities and community based health services for Oklahoma's Indian population are high priorities for the OSU College of Osteopathic Medicine.

The college received a $350,000 grant from the U.S. Public Health Service to develop an on-site general practice residency program for Oklahoma's American Indian populations.

Residents in the program gain valuable experience providing primary care for patients at the Sapulpa Indian Health clinic.

Holdenville working to overcome past internal problems

by Stephanie Berryhill

HOLDENVILLE — The aroma of lafvmpece, cvtahakv, and tvklike tokse wafted through the small room, up the hall, and into the parlor of Creek Nation's most recently opened bingo hall.

Tribal citizens, Council members, and even Principal Chief Bill Fife probably would not have disputed they had just eaten food prepared by some of the finest cooks in the Muscogee Nation.

Through the community's hardships, it is these dedicated women — the Holdenville Indian Community Social Committee — that are the fiber of the nation's southernmost community.

"They are the backbone of the community and probably the brains too. They don't have to be asked [to make time-consuming plans and meal preparations] they just come and do it. That's the kind of people we have," secretary Cora Beaver said.

Although a social committee, it helps the community meet other objectives.

With its planning of activities to observe social events and major holidays, the committee has attracted community interest, thus helping increase the membership roster to 203. In addition to social activity planning, the committee opened a thriftshop in February. The thriftshop has enabled them to generate funding for their activities, thus lessening community expenditures.

Among other community committees are: economic development; membership; and elders' nutrition.

The elders' nutrition committee is one of its most recently formed committees.

Established in January, its objective is to obtain a tribal elderly nutrition program for community elders. The committee is nearing completion of a survey to be dispursed during commodity distribution days and on home visits to elders. The community board of directors anticipate the survey findings will demonstrate the elders' need for a nutrition program. Funding for the nutrition program is among Holdenville's proposal requests from the Council's community development block grant.

The tribes sixth bingo hall — Creek Nation Holdenville Bingo — opened within the community center in February. Because of internal community disputes, the hall is currently under the control of the tribal gaming operations authority board. Secretary Cora Beaver estimates it will be six months to a year before the board of directors will overtake the operation of the bingo hall.

The current board was elected to office in July 1992 and has been the plaintiffs in an on-going dispute between the former board since November 1991, Beaver said. Because the two factions are still in litigation, the board members are prohibited from discussing case details, she said. But they won't deny the community has had its setbacks and problems.

The community's reputation has made the board high profile community leaders. Beaver attributes their questionable reputations to the previous actions of past and present community members.

"What surprises a lot of people is when [they meet us and] we're not what they envisioned us to be," Beaver laughed.

Although litigation is still pending, the board continues to make positive steps to overcome the lingering effects of its once-abused constitution and funds.

"We want a good image," said parliamentarian Clarence Johnson. "I think they know we mean business."

Beaver said the community had an account balance near zero at the time of the board's July installation. Up until fiscal year 1993 — October — its only source of revenue was the smokeshop, she said. Johnson said the current board ran on a platform of restoring community government and finances to order.

"This board ran on the platform of restructuring [community government] and accountability [of funds] to the community."

The community adopted new by-laws in July 1992 and is strictly abiding by generally accepted accounting principles, Johnson said.

Beaver said the board is trying to educate community members through rigidly abiding by the constitution.

community objectives have made these tasks less cumbersome.

"It's easy working with the board because our goals are pretty much the same. Were heading in the right direction due to many community members that have supported the board," Beaver said.

Though progress seems slow, Johnson believes the board will have been successful if the community has a definite sense of direction by July 1994.

"It doesn't seem like we've gone very far, but if we have some kind of direction by the time our two years is up ..."

Editor's note: Other community officers are Mitchell Musgrove, chair, and Rechinta Youmans, vice-chair. The treasurer's position is vacant.

Creek named coach of the year

COWETA — Creek citizen Mike Phillips has been named the Tulsa metro coach of the year for turning around the Coweta High School girls basketball program.

Phillips, the son of legendary coach Ray Phillips, guided the Lady Tigers from a 1-21 season to a 17-8 campaign that included a state tournament berth his year. It was the first state tournament for a Coweta girls basketball team in 26 years. And, the prospects for a return trip to the 5-on-5 playoffs appear good with four returning starters.

"We've had better seasons, but overall this year was our best in that we won the regional and area championships and went to state," Phillips said.

He cited the off-season program and an experienced group of juniors and sophomores who matured to lead the Lady Tigers. Phillips is completing his 11th season at the Coweta helm.

His father, Ray, coached boys and girls basketball, football and baseball.

Tribe ups the stakes with lawsuit against tax commission long forgotten," Fife said. "The state is not seeing the bigger picture." Fife said the tribe's sovereignty produced positive results for all citizens — not just Indians.

"We used some of our tax revenues to assist a local community to develop fire protection. To us, it was not just a matter of protecting the lives of our citizens, it was a concern for all citizens," Fife said. "Our employees, including those in smokeshops, are paying personal state income tax. It seems very shortsighted for the tax commission to concentrate its resources in a fight they cannot win, against Indian tribes."

The chief said it is "ridiculous" that some Indians do not pay taxes.

"Last fiscal year, our employees paid well over one-half million dollars in payroll taxes alone. We have more than 36,000 tribal citizens that pay personal income and sales taxes."

Fife said he is appalled at the idea that the state would like to take tobacco taxes and place the revenue in the general fund. Fife said revenues from tobacco sales are being returned to the tribe to operate a variety of programs and services for citizens and non-citizens alike.

Fife said he is encouraging all citizens to contact their state legislators and urge repeal of enrolled Senate Bill 759.

"We want people to realize that tribes have the right and the power to regulate its own business and that we have the power to tax," Fife said. "We also want people to be aware of discriminating legislation that is targeted to a special population.

"This fight is not just the Creeks against the tax commission," Fife said. "It is a fight for freedom of choice for the consumer and the fight against legislative intrusion into tribal affairs. The law even attempts to tax our tribal citizens. Giving up 75 percent of tax revenues is like giving up 75 percent of our tribal sovereignty."

Tribal joint venture awarded technology transfer contract

Creeks one of three competing for manufacturing contract

OKMULGEE — A joint venture between the Muscogee (Creek) Nation and the Mississippi Band of Choctaws has been awarded a contract related to the super collider project.

Choctaw Creek Technologies (CCT) — a collaboration of Muscogee (Creek) Nation Manufacturing and the Choctaw Manufacturing Enterprises — was awarded the high energy booster quadrupole magnet technology transfer contract for the superconducting super collider project in Ellis County, Texas.

Chief Bill Fife stated "We are honored to be a part of such a giant project that will benefit all mankind. The super collider will help to uncover new knowledge of high energy. The new knowledge gained from super collider will impact the future of technology and society that will take us into the 21st century."

"We are excited about the potential this project has for the Mississippi Choctaws and the Muscogee (Creek) Nation," Fife said.

Choctaw Creek Technologies is one of three firms to be awarded the technology transfer contracts. The transfer contract calls for CCT to maintain a presence at the super collider site for 13 months gathering the information necessary for production of the magnets used for conducting.

The joint venture, one of the first of its kind between separate tribes, began late last year with discussions between Fife and Choctaw Chief Phillip Martin. Those talks came to fruition in February when the tribes inked a pact to combine resources.

The historic agreement was signed in the U.S. Senate Committee on Indian Affairs hearing room in Washington D.C., on Feb. 16.

Summer youth employment program provides training and jobs

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Oklahoma's Muscogee (Creek) Nation employment and training department could be rated as one of the best programs in the nation utilizing the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA).

Through JTPA, the Creek Nation counsels and provides financial assistance to adults seeking vocational or specialized skills to gain employment.

In addition, the Creek Nation JTPA also provides summer jobs to more than 200 youths in providing valuable work experience.

This year the youths are scheduled to participate in one of two identical summer programs.

The first session was May 31 to June 4 and the second, June 7-11.

Goals for the summer session are to build self-esteem among Creek youth, to increase awareness of and requirements for career opportunities, and to evaluate personal career interests.

The OSU/Okmulgee campus is the site of the programs in the joint effort by the Tribe and the school.

"OSU/Okmulgee's newly-opened assessment center was a major factor in us choosing the college to host these summer programs," said Abe McIntosh, director of Human Resources Development for the Creek Nation.

"Each student will participate in career interest and aptitude testing in the computerized test center," McIntosh said. "Test results will enable us to better place the student in a summer job that meets his or her interests and aptitude. The information also will become a valuable resource for career advisement."

Agenda items range from career interest profiling to a True Colors Self-analysis, job preparation, enhancing self-esteem, alcoholism and family, chemical dependency, date rape and sexual abuse, and AIDS education.

In addition to helping tribal youths, the employment and training department also concentrates on helping adults in their quest for usable employment.

"This department is along the same lines as the education department, but we provide short time opportunities so our people can gain a usable skill for employment," said JTPA director Curtis Hicks.

JTPA provides an allowance for those in vocational or recognized job training programs during their time in the program. The Creek Nation JTPA helps more than 200 students each year.

Hicks said because the Creek Nation operates the JTPA program, Indian people are better served.

"There is a big difference in recognizing the needs of the Indian people," Hicks said in citing the advantage of an Indian operated program. "The culture and religion of Indian people play a big role in knowing the needs and concerns of our people."

Hicks's staff also plays a major role in providing a relaxing atmosphere when Indian people enter the JTPA office.

"We have recognizable Indians working here," Hicks said. "Because of that we understand their needs and we're able to communicate more effectively with Indian people."

The Creek Nation JTPA program has met the federal requirements each year. The Creek Nation program was monitored in December by the Division of Indian and Native American Programs. The program is monitored every two years and the Creek program received passing marks each time by staying within the guidelines.

"We're proud of that accomplishment," Hicks said of the monitoring process.

Second Chief reports Letters to the Editor from health care reform task force

by Libby Ouaid, The Daily Oklahoman

OKMULGEE — Oklahoma needs desperately more health care providers in rural areas says Muscogee (Creek) Nation Second Chief Shelly Crow.

Crow was one of 36 consultants to first lady Hillary Clinton's health care reform task force.

Crow, also a nursing instructor at the University of Tulsa, said expanded rural health care and decentralized health care for American Indians were two of her primary concerns in her work for the task force.

While President Bill Clinton has extended his deadline for submitting a health care proposal to Congress repeatedly, Mrs. Clinton's task force charter expired.

Crow said she thinks it was successful, but she was surprised when she was notified May 28 of its expiration.

"I think the way it was designed, with grass roots people, congressional people, and health care providers, — it brought things to the forefront," she said. "[The U.S.] has an $888 billion health care system and we do not serve all of the people."

Crow estimates 30 million people in the United States do not receive health care.

"It's not perfect," Crow said of the task force work. "But no one else has been taking on this issue."

Crow was invited to be a consultant when she met the first lady at the inauguration celebrations. "Basically, I wanted to work on women's and children's health issues."

Crow also brought her concerns about American Indians and rural Oklahomans to the task force's attention. Crow said in Oklahoma, rural populations suffer from a lack of health care providers.

"We have a problem of recruiting physicians in underpopulated areas," Crow said, arguing that it could be remedied by allowing nurse practitioners to practice in the state, which would require the support of the American Medical Association.

The task force examined the infrastructure of Indian Health Services, which Crow said needs to be decentralized. The Creek Nation developed a health care model, not yet approved, designed to give the tribe autonomy over its own health care and allow direct access to the White House.

"We need to cut out the red tape for the tribes that run their systems themselves," she said. "The tribes should be more in control. That's what the president wants. We know better than Indian Health Services."

She cited some of the same problems in rural areas, stressing that it's important "to let rural people in Oklahoma decide" what kind of health care they need.

"We've been designing programs and then telling people what their needs are. We need to find out what their needs are and then design programs."

The task force met 23 times in late April and May, including some meetings with the president. It also held a public hearing. The dozen-member group was aided by 511 health experts mostly from federal agencies and by 36 health care consultants. Its charter expired May 30.

Clinton's original May 3 deadline was first extended to late May and then to mid or late June. The plan is on hold until Congress acts on the deficit-reduction plan.

Environmentalists praise birds

Editor:

Since the beginning of time birds have played an important role to Mother Earth as the free spirits of the sky. They bring to us signs that forecast the future.

The winds have a song that is heard by the most sensitive ear. It tells us things and brings our seasons to us.

Before the airplane the true masters of the sky are the birds. Birds play an important role in our food chain, not to mention the Native American stories, songs and spiritual roles. A lot can be applied and learned today by watching these masters of the sky.

Birds play an important role as a key indicator species in areas all over the United States a balance between earth, wind and water must be present for certain species to survive. Those who respect this balance must consider what is needed to aiding the survival of these beautiful sky creatures.

Water, food, shelter and resting areas are the basic requirements for bird survival. Birds use water from a variety of sources for drinking and bathing. These sources may be as small as a puddle or as large as a lake. The types of food varies according to season, migration, raising

Former Creek Princess discusses Indians in the legal profession

By Rhonda Harjo, National Vice President, Native American Law Students Association

Our tribe is one of the most progressive and successful tribes in the nation. Evidencing that success is the growing number of professionals and future professionals among the tribal members.

On April 1-2, the national Native American Law Students Association held its first meeting in conjunction with the annual federal Indian bar conference. According to the 1992 American Indian Graduate Center statistics, at least nine Creek students were financially assisted in law schools across the country. This number does not include Creek students not assisted by the AIGC.

Nevertheless, these numbers do reflect a positive trend among our people. More Creek people are interested in the law and helping our people through legal means.

These numbers also reflect the need for financial and emotional support. I would encourage the tribal leaders and members to send a message of support to these law students by providing financial aid for graduate students within the educational budget. You can also send a letter of support, which can be addressed below. If young and molting. Some birds like berries other prefer seed. Birds need shelter to escape predators and to survive harsh weather.

Think of how sad it would be to be without the beautiful sights and sounds of birds in the morning and to bring forth the spring. We can do so much by simply increasing the awareness of man's relationship to the spirits of the sky. As elders we can pass legends and teaching to the little ones. Education and environmental respect could be given to the little ones as early as Headstart. We ourselves can help by taking time out from our busy lives to go outside and hear what is on the wind and respect what is in the sky.

Congress considers reforming individual Indian money accounts

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Oklahoma congressman Mike Synar and U.S. Senator Daniel K. Inouye have introduced legislation calling for the reform of individual Indian Money (IMM) accounts currently handled by the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA).

The reform bill is entitled "The Native American Trust Fund Accounting and Management Reform Act of 1993," House Bill 1846.

Synar's bill would have five major effects if passed by congress and the senate.

The bill would require the Secretary of the Interior to invest and pay interest on IMM funds held in trust; to authorize new and innovative ways to manage trust funds; clarify the trust responsibility of the U.S. with respect to Indians; establish a program for the training and recruitment of Indians in the management of their trust funds; and require a periodic accounting to trust funds holders.

Within the Muscogee Nation more than 1,500 accounts would be affected in addition to the Tribal trust funds now administered by the BIA, said Mike Factor, Muscogee Nation controller.

The new legislation would make it possible for tribes to direct funds to financial institutions of their choice. It would also "require" the government to invest and pay interest on the IMM accounts.

Another part of the reform bill calls for the investment of accounts in financial institutions on or near reservations, which will promote the economic development in Indian communities.

The reform bill would also provide an accounting of the funds to account holders.

"Its enactment is necessary to reform longstanding mismanagement of the Indian trust funds and to give 300,000 Native Americans, for whom the Bureau of Indian Affairs holds money in trust, a greater say in the management of their affairs," Synar said.

The bill would affect 330 tribes with some tribes holding multiple accounts. Synar said approximately 2,965 separate accounts make up the Tribal Trust Fund.

"The tribes do not participate equally in the Fund," Synar said. "In fact, according to the BIA's Office of Trust Fund Management, 77 percent of the Fund assets are held by eight percent of the tribes.

Sadly, the BIA has failed to fulfill its fiduciary duties to the beneficiaries of the Indian Trust Fund," Synar said when he introduced the bill in the U.S. House of Representatives.

"Under the management of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Indian Trust Fund is equivalent to a bank that doesn't know how much money it has," he said.

"The real losers in the mismanagement of the Indian Trust Fund are the Tribes and the individual Indian account holders," the Congressman said. "These account holders have been victimized by the federal government. Yet they have no recourse except to the very agency that is responsible for their predicament."

Synar said the reform would correct those problems. He said the legislation was prepared with the advice and counsel of many Native Americans and tribal officials.

Tribal council authorizes tribal self-governance beginning in fiscal year 1994

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Items ranging from Head Start to self governance were covered by the Muscogee (Creek) National Council during its regular monthly session on May 22.

The bill called for the re-organization of the Head Start program. But, it was tabled by the council for a 60-day period. The move to hold off any re-organization was made by Dkmulgee County representative Harvey Gilroy. His motion passed by a 15-11 margin.

The additional time will allow the tribal administration and the Head Start directors to assess the current program and present a report to the council during the 60-day period.

In another important decision by the council a move toward total self-governance was made when they authorized the Principal Chief to sign the self-governance compact and the annual funding agreement with the United States government.

The bill allows the Creek Nation to provide certain services now provided by the BIA Area Office. When negotiations are agreed upon, Chief Bill Fife will sign the compact turning over governmental funds to the Creek Nation for certain programs, instead of the funds going to the BIA.

Chief Fife said the bill would go into effect with the start of the 1994 fiscal year, which will be October, 1993.

The council approved a three month study by the Higher Education Department on the feasibility of funding selected Creek and Euchee students who would return two years of service to the tribe after graduation.

The proposal would seek the top two percent of Creek and Euchee high school students to be fully-funded by the Tribe at area colleges or vo-tech schools. Upon completion of their programs, the students would be required to serve a minimum of two years or a maximum of five years with the Creek Nation work force.

In other council action:

— Edwin Marshall of Wetumka was confirmed to the election board;

— adopted the Higher Education Tribal Grant authorization, which allows the Principal Chief to request Higher Education contract with the BIA be converted to the tribe's Higher Education Authorization Act;

— approved the conveying of mineral rights to Clarence Cloud of certain lands in Creek County to complete action taken by the 1981 National Council; — repealed a bill that authorized $300,000 from the Permanent Fund for a bid on a commercial bank. Since the Creek Nation bid to purchase Cimarron Savings and Loan failed, the council approved the bill to repeal; — approved an amendment in the election code which now calls for the posting of absentee ballots when completed;

— approved $400 to the Tallahassee Ceremonial Ground for replacing a water well pump;

— approved $5,440 to the Elder-Youth conference from the water-sewer grants account;

— and approved a resolution supporting the request of Haskell Indian Junior College's board of regents to the Office of Management and Budget that the amount of $700,000 be added to the fiscal year 1994 budget.

OSU senior wins art show

STILLWATER — Tim Tiger, a Stillwater senior at Oklahoma State University, won first place in Studio Art during the student art exhibition.

Tiger's entry was an untitled work of copper, bronze, wood and brass.

The Stillwater NewsPress reported Tiger's work was typical of the originality displayed in the Art Department's exhibition.

The NewsPress reported the following interview with Tiger on his art work.

"The work basically stems from elements of Indian history," said Tiger, a Stillwater native who is a member of the Creek nation. "Part of it comes from the Spiro mounds of Oklahoma and also elements of the ghost dance from the late 1800's. It also derives from personal experience as well."

Tiger does not want to reveal too much about his piece, though.

"I try to give a small hint, but not too much, so the viewer can pull whatever they want to out of the piece," he said. "Students of Indian history could pull a lot from it."

While he has been a metals student for quite some time, Tiger said his winning piece was his first attempt at finding his own style.

"In the past I've been concentrating on technique. This was my first branch out into my own," he said. "My metals instructor, Chris Ramsey, and my drawing instructor, Marty Avrett, were both instrumental. Chris is always encouraging you to push yourself and Marty teaches you to never, ever forget the basics, and to explore other mediums."

Tribal program providing youth with jobs, training

The program was reviewed by a different body in May, and the result of that evaluation could have far reaching results.

Members of the federal General Accounting Office made an on-site inspection. Their findings will be turned over to the House Committee on education and labor. The House committee will consider the options of a state-operated or tribal-operated JPTA program.

"This is unique in that they (GAO) visited six sites across the country to make their report," Hicks said. From the 186 Native American programs in the United States, including Alaska and Hawaii, the Creek Nation was chosen as one of the six programs to be evaluated.

Hicks believes the investigation team will find how well the Creek Nation program relates to its citizens for an effective program in solving the unemployment problem.

Joint venture contract first step for high tech future

Officer, said it is unheard of for such a young organization to be awarded a contract so soon.

"We have assembled a great team," Schisler said. "I am especially pleased that we have been successful on our first attempt (for contracts)."

Earlier, Choctaw Creek Technologies, was awarded a contract to manufacture cable measuring machines for the super conducting super collider project.

Tribal leaders said the contracts are the results of several institutions cooperating for the benefit of many. Choctaw Creek Technologies is a partnership between two tribes and this organization has created partnerships with higher education institutions, federal agencies, and the local business community.

Included in the project is Oklahoma State University-Okmulgee. The school will provide training and technical assistance for the high technology work required with the super collider project.

The joint venture between the Creeks and the Choctaws was created as the result of two tribal leaders sharing similar philosophies on economic development. Mississippi Choctaw Principal Chief Phillip Martin extended an invitation to Muscogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief Bill Fife to tour the tribal industry on the Choctaw Reservation. Fife organized a delegation of tribal officials including National Council Speaker Clarence Cloud, council members Wilson Bear, George Tiger, along with other tribal employees to attend the tour. Jimmy Gibson, Bureau of Indian Affairs Okmulgee Agency Superintendent, was also instrumental in assisting with this tour.

From that visit, the two tribes began discussing possible business opportunities. Chief Martin set up a meeting that included tribal officials and an engineering firm to consider potential involvement in the super conducting super collider project. That discussion led to an agreement to form the joint venture. The agreement was negotiated by tribal attorneys Tim Posey and Leah Ware, former National Council representative Jerry Wilson, and Fife.

A delegation of tribal officials and a representative of OSU- Okmulgee toured the super collider project facility in March.

Tribal officials then sought the support of the National Council for the joint venture and the formation of Muscogee Creek Nation Manufacturing Enterprises.

"I am very proud of the tribal leadership demonstrated with this joint venture," said Clarence Cloud, speaker of the tribal council. "We've known all along that cooperation is essential to any success we might have."

A formal proposal was submitted and then presented by project officials.

"We appreciate the support we received from OSU-Okmulgee," said Fife. "Their leadership and their institutional capabilities are essential to the success of this joint venture.

Fife noted that the tribe brings outside capital to the Oklahoma economy and that contributes to the economic growth of the state.

"When the tribe builds partnerships, we benefit everyone," Fife said.

"We're increasing productivity and that increases job opportunities and our tax base," Fife said. "The work is just now beginning," Fife said. "We need to maintain our emphasis on quality. These are characteristics of all of our partners."

Fife also expressed his appreciation for U.S. Congressman Bill Brewster, of Oklahoma's third district for his support.

"We are very pleased that Congressman Brewster supports continued funding of the superconducting super collider project," Fife said. "It only makes sense to continue funding considering the large investment for the future that has already been made. We are asking for support from all Oklahoma congressional delegates and the local Chamber of Commerce to improve the economy in the Muscogee (Creek) Nation reservation area for the benefit of all citizens that reside within the reservation area."

If the joint venture is successful during the technology transfer phase, Choctaw Creek Technologies could vie for a $45 million production contract that could result in 100 to 200 jobs.

Creek Nation wins injunction against tax commission

by Noah Long

OKLAHOMA CITY — A federal judge ordered the Oklahoma Highway Patrol to stop interfering with the delivery of tobacco products bound for the Muskogee (Creek) Nation.

U.S. District Court Judge Wayne Alley granted the order in a preliminary injunction in early June. Alley said he wants to prohibit tribal and state law enforcement confrontations.

"We won one," said Muskogee principal chief Bill Fife about the decision.

The case arose when a state trooper seized a tribal delivery truck on U.S. Highway 69 in Wagoner County. The $30,000 truck was approved for purchase during the regular May Council meeting.

The judge, however, did not release the tobacco products nor the delivery truck to the tribe.

Both will remain impounded by the state until the court makes a decision in regard to the constitutionality of a new state law to tax non-Indians who purchase tobacco products is constitutional.

The law also states any untaxed tobacco products are subject to seizure.

Alley suggested that the state's new method of collecting taxes on Indian tobacco purchases may be questionable since it may tax tribal members also.

"There are substantial issues of tribal sovereignty involved," Alley said.

Fife said sovereignty has always been the main issue.

"The state has no right to impose their laws on us because we are a sovereign nation," Fife said.

"It begs the question that just because you're not... collecting and remitting [taxes] it gives the state carte blanche," said Mike Minnis, an Oklahoma City attorney representing the tribe.

"Before we have a tribal patrolman and a highway patrolman getting into conflict, this should be decided in court."

Alley agreed and told the state attorney, "you're going to feel pretty bad if there's some confrontation."

MUSKOGEE — A symbol of economic growth, Creek Nation Muskogee Bingo will officially open July 24, announced Muskogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief Bill Fife.

The bingo hall will be the tribe's seventh and it is the second largest in the Creek Nation, with a capacity of 1,000 players. Creek Nation Tulsa Bingo has a capacity of 1,200, while the Okmulgee hall seats 850.

Message from the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief Bill Fife

Recently, Choctaw Creek Technologies (CCT) — a collaboration of Muscogee (Creek) Nation Manufacturing and the Choctaw Manufacturing Enterprises (Mississippi Choctaws) — was awarded the high energy booster quadruple magnet technology transfer contract for the superconducting supercollider project in Ellis County, Texas.

This joint venture between the Creeks and Choctaws was created as the result of two tribal leaders sharing similar philosophies on economic development.

We were honored to be a part of such a giant project that would benefit all mankind. The supercollider project would have helped to uncover new knowledge of high energy. The new knowledge that could have been gained from the supercollider project could have an impact the future of technology and society that would take us into the 21st century. We were excited about the potential this project had for the Muscogee (Creek) Nation as well as the Mississippi Choctaws.

As principal chief, I feel it is my duty to report to the citizens my concerns of the voting record of our Oklahoma House of Representatives in Washington, D.C. regarding the supercollider project. Our people should be aware that we as Indian people are now always represented fairly or in our best interest.

As you are aware, the state of Oklahoma is in recession and with little future hope of economic development for anyone much less our people. This has been proven over and over with the statistics of unemployment in this state. Minority hiring by state government reflects that our people represent less than three percent employment.

I ask you to contact our senators and congressmen to support our project. We as American citizens and tribal members necessitate respect that other voters are given (not only at election time); I appreciate your assistance in contacting all officials concerning this matter.

Clarification

The page 12 photograph in the June edition of The Muscogee Nation News should have identified the pastor of Snake Creek Baptist Church as Rev. Boots Fixico. The keynote speaker for the Creek Council House Museum rededication was Dr. Donald Fixico.

Citizen thankful for education

Editor:

I would like to sincerely thank everyone involved in my getting the opportunity to further my education at Wes Watkins Area Vo-Tech at Wetumka.

It would not have been possible for me had it not been for tribal help and support.

This experience has given me new hope of finding a secure place in the field of x-ray technology and new found self confidence in being able to support my family and supply them with the basic needs and possibly a few luxuries.

It has been an experience I will never forget and an opportunity that I am deeply grateful for.

I would like to acknowledge the heritage of my grandmother, Ella M. Jackson, without whom I would not have been eligible for this educational opportunity in the first place. I am proud of my Indian heritage and all the advantages the Creek Nation has helped me and my family afford.

I hope that many other Native Americans will take advantage of the tribal opportunities that will help them to acquire a better quality of life and a higher standard of living.

Again, thank you so much.

Speaker Cloud reflects on service

Editor:

I am writing to express my appreciation to all Creek citizens for the privilege of serving you on the Muscogee (Creek) National Council this last term as your speaker.

My service to the Creek Nation started many years ago when there was only two employees — former Principal Chief Claude Cox and Dee Sloan. Since then, the Creek Nation has become more and more progressive — we now have over 400 employees, and are the largest employer in Okmulgee County. We are also a leader in Indian bingo enterprises.

Through our revenues, we are providing educational opportunities and jobs for our people. With education a priority we are now raising the standard of living of our people.

Again, thank you for your support — as I have served on the National Council, the tribal housing

Medicine man praised for healing

Editor:

Last January my husband had a strange rash appear on his face, neck, chest, and back. We tried to treat it with everything we could think of; it only got worse. Finally, by April, we went to a dermatologist for help. We were desperate; my husband was suffering so. In the meantime, my son-in-law had read about David Lewis in The Muscogee Nation News and called him. David came to see my husband and gave him medicine to drink. Within four days, the scales, pus, and scabs had begun to slough off. Even though he still has some small amount of rash left on his neck, face, and scalp, the horrendous sores are gone. His chest and back are clear.

From the earth our Creator gave us natural things to assist us in healing and through medicine men such as David Lewis it is possible. He has been enabled to help people like my husband. Your people must not lose this knowledge and the blessings of medicine men like David.

Council funds statues for two Creek warriors

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Two legendary Muscogee warriors will be honored thanks to the actions of the National Council during its regular meeting on Saturday, June 26.

Retired Lt. Col. Ernest Childers, a congressional medal award recipient and historic leader Opothleyahola will be honored with statues in two separate locations funded by the Muscogee (Creek) National Council.

The Ernest Childers comemorative project was established by the Broken Arrow Rotary Foundation to erect a permanent statue honoring the Creekcitizen for his military honors during World War II. The statue is to be created by noted Indian artist and sculptor Allen Houser and erected in Broken Arrow.

The council authorized $15,000 from the dissolution of the Creek Nation construction account. The donation will complete the project.

Childers received the Purple Heart, American Defense Service medal, WWII victory medal, Oklahoma distinguished service cross, national defense service medal, combat infantryman badge, American campaign medal, Army of Occupation medal, middle East campaign medal and the Italian Cross of Valor.

September 22, 1993 will mark 50 years since he undertook actions that earned him the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Opothleyahola will become the first Muscogee (Creek) inducted among the present 35 Hall of Fame inductees at the site in Anadarko.

The council authorized $5,000 for the bust of Opothleyahola for the Hall of Fame. A duplicate sculpture will be made for display within the Creek Nation, as designated by the council.

Opothleyahola's induction into the National Indian Hall of Fame will be August 22 in Anadarko.

Opothleyahola opposed the ceding of lands to the United States in 1820, rose in the council to town chief, proposed the law against selling tribal lands, ordered the execution of William McIntosh for signing the Treaty of Indian Springs in 1825, negotiated for the Treaty of Washington for the tribe to remain in Alabama.

When the United States violated the Treaty of Washington and forced the Creeks to move to the Indian Territory, Opothleyahola led his people to the Indian territory.

He died in Kansas at the Battle of Hoiny Falls against the Confederate army when the Union forces failed to support his group. He did lead his forces to two earlier victories against the southern forces before Hoiny Falls.

Principal Chief Bill Fife said Opothleyahola's presence is felt today "as our Nation attempts to find alternatives to removal, and as our people are forcibly removed in direct violation of their treaties."

In other council items, Chief Fife sent back to the council with a veto a bill that would have allowed the City of Muskogee to annex the land where the Bingo hall is located.

Chief Fife told the council Muskogee has no legal authority to annex Muscogee tribal trust lands.

Fife said the annexation could have put the bingo hall "in jeopardy of attempted taxation by the Oklahoma Tax Commission.

The Chief urged a negotiation settlement for city services to the bingo hall, which was later agreed upon by the City council of Muskogee.

The council also authorized the Principal Chief to enter into negotiations with the City of Tulsa on the Riverside Parkway extension project, which would enhance traffic flow to the Tulsa bingo hall.

The council also:

- allocated funds to renovate the Yardeka community center for a nutrition site;

- re-appointed Joe Johnson to the Creek Nation Supreme Court until July 1, 1999;

- confirmed Samuel S. Alexander to serve as tax commissioner;

- sent back to committee an authorization to Arledge and Associates to conduct the annaul audit;

- authorized expenditures from the Citizenship Board replacement fund to purchase a camera for photo tribal membership cards;

- re-authorized emergency home improvement funds of $25,000 to Creek citizens who meet income guidelines;

Creeks, Choctaws host 4-H youth workshop near Dustin

by Noah Long

DUSTIN — Young people from two tribal nations gathered at the Muscogee (Creek) Agri-Business farm to learn first hand the opportunities available in agriculture.

Sponsored by the Muscogee and Choctaw Nations, the seminar featured vocational agriculture instructors and Dustin area farmers and ranchers who explained the steps and knowledge needed for a successful livestock venture.

Eighty-nine 4-H and FFA members from the two tribal nations attended the seminar. Among those leading the workshop was Dusty Smallwood of the Bennington Public Schools vo-ag department who talked about the importance of care and selection of a swine project.

David Sorrell, Bryan County 4-H Club Extension Agent, presented the worshop on sheep. He was assisted by two Bryan County 4-H members. The highlight of the presentation was a demonstration of showmanship with the 4-H members and their show lambs.

Stretch May of the Longview Ranch in Dustin explained the beef industry, and Charles Sparks of Sparks Limousin and Quarter Horses, also in Dustin, lectured on the beef and horse industry. He was assisted by his son Charlie who used a Limousin show heifer for a demonstration on showmanship.

Curtis McDaniel, Idabel, critiqued the heifer using the terms that livestock judges use during a livestock show. The final presentation was a horse showmanship demonstration by Robin Cooper, Creek Nation 4-H Extension agent.

Coordinating the event were Cooper, Creek Nation 4-H agent and Tommie James, Choctaw Nation program director. Also helping out were Harry Villanueva and Barbara Gillispie, Creek Nation assistants, along with Judy Needham, Griff Servati and Brad Bain, Choctaw Nation assistants.

Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation wants to be role model for others

OKMULGEE — Hoping to be a role model for Mvskoke youth, 20-year-old Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation Marva Jackson believes she exemplifies the importance of being both culturally attuned and achieving an education.

Marva was honored with the Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation title in early June.

Marva was not raised in either a traditional Mvskoke ceremonial ground or church environment. Although she is three-fourths Creek, the traditional ceremonial aspect of Mvskoke culture was foreign to her until she began attending ceremonial ground dances two years ago.

"Everybody would tell me stories about [the ceremonial grounds] and I kept getting more interested," said the Bird Clan and Cussetah Tribal Town member.

During the last two years she has attended tribal ceremonial ground dances with her parents — Joe and Flora Jackson — and has developed an interest in ceremonial ground ways and teachings. Marva admits it was merely fun in the beginning, but not knowing anything about her culture inspired her to listen to traditional elders and leaders to learn. Marva has been shaking shells for one year and has been lead shell shaker for some stompdance leaders — an art which sometimes takes years of experience to learn.

Marva would like to see more youth involved in Mvskoke culture, realize the importance of respecting and listening to elders, and strive for an education, she said.

The third of five siblings — all girls — Marva is making a conscious effort to serve as a role model for her younger sisters also.

Not only did Marva feel she would be a good candidate, so did several other tribal citizens. The encouraging words of Mvskoke elders was the impetus to her making the decision to run for Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation.

"A lot of the elders said a lot of encouraging words and told me I should run," Marva said.

Because the Northeastern State University junior is pursuing studies in marketing and has begun gaining a grasp on her cultural identity, she felt she could contend for the Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation title.

Marva is the granddaughter of the late Timmie and Louella Jackson and the late Melissa Wacoche Lindsey.

Second Chief Shelly Crow leads Congressional call-in on collider vote OKMULGEE — Muscogee (Creek) Nation Second Chief Shelly Crow led a contingent of tribal employees and volunteers on a call-in and letter writing campaign to the U.S. House of Representatives urging funding in the federal budget for the super conducting super collider project near Waxahachie, Texas.

"The office of the Principal Chief has many challenges day to day," Crow said. "One of these challenges became apparent on the vote of the U.S. House of Representatives.

"We found out that morning (June 24) that they would vote on the super collider project."

Crow then organize several tribal employees and volunteers to begin making phone calls and sending facsimile transmission letters.

"We pulled together a staff to have input on the house," Crow said. "Over 200 phone calls were made directly to Congress and over 350 letters were typed and faxed by 10:30 p.m."

Crow said the effort was another example

"We appreciate all of the people who worked to educate our representatives and senators."

Tribal secretaries receive training

OKMULGEE — Secretaries from the various departments at the Muscogee (Creek) National tribal headquarters received additional skills during a secretarial training workshop on June 22-23.

Conducted by the Diversified Management Services of Albuquerque, N.M., two eight-hour sessions were conducted on the campus of Oklahoma State University-Okmulgee.

A total of 37 secretaries took part in the training session that covered the topics of telephone skills, time management and stress reduction. The workshop was coordinated through Perry Anderson, personnel manager of the tribe.

Anderson said he was pleased with the program and with the number of secretaries participating.

Anderson said each department's development fund covered the costs of the workshops.

Guiding the secretaries were instructors Laurie Donahoo and Dr. C. Michael Newman, both of Diversified Management Services.

Festival olympic results

OKMULGEE — Morris Indian Community took top honors in the largest ever Creek Nation Festival summer youth olympics, said Henry Harjo, coordinator.

"This year's summer olympics had 710 boys and girls from six to 15 years old participating in 37 different running, jumping and throwing events," Harjo said. "This year's junior olympics was the biggest that Creek Nation has seen. We had 24 communities, including three tribes -- Muscogee-Creek, Sac and Fox, and the Seminoles."

Following Morris in the point total was Okmulgee Indian Community; Okfuskee took third place.

Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation Marva Jackson presented the gold, silver, and bronze medals to the winners. A total of 176 medals were presented. The olympics opened with a prayer by David Lewis, and was followed by speakers Thomas Berryhill, Lewis, Kenneth Moore, second chief Shelly Crow and Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation.

Harjo said "the most inspiring and heart warming message to the people, parents, and grandparents was delivered by the main medicine man of the Creek tribe, David Lewis Jr."

Tribal citizen Jenna Boyce of Morris ended the opening ceremonies with a song. Rain prevented the completion of the olympics. However, only the boys 6 and 7-year-old 50-yard dash and the relay events were not completed.

"The employees were more than helpful by giving their time and effort to make this year's junior olympics a success," Harjo said.

In brief

Inhalants abuse symposium

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) Nation Children and Family Services Administration Youth and Family Program has scheduled an inhalants abuse symposium Aug. 5.

Irene Culley, youth and family program counselor, has planned the symposium with the assistance of Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation Marva Jackson.

As Jackson feels she should be a role model for Mvskoke youth, she was compelled to become involved in coordinating the symposium, she said. Jackson feels that taking an active position against substance abuse will help have an impact on the physical well-being of Creek youth.

The symposium will be held in the tribal independent agencies (mound) building auditorium, located at U.S. Highway 75 and loop 56. For more information, contact Culley toll-free at 1 (800) 521-5432 or (918) 756-2112.

Creeks instrumental in developing cancer support group

OKMULGEE — They talk with still quiet voices. Each one speaks of pain, anguish, frustration, and the struggle of day-to-day living with cancer as others listen and nod their heads knowingly.

For this group of cancer patients, the gathering is a reaffirmation of a commitment to live. Just talking about life as a cancer patient seems to be therapeutic.

Before the summer, local cancer patients had to travel to Muskogee or Tulsa to find a support group, but because of the efforts of a Creek citizen and a Creek church, Okmulgee has a cancer support group.

This support group was formed when Mona Barnett, herself diagnosed with breast cancer, saw the need and began working to meet it.

"I wanted to have a supportive caring atmosphere for people who have been diagnosed with cancer to meet," Barnett said. "Lives are turned upside down when people are diagnosed with cancer."

Newtown United Methodist Church pastor Sammy Chupco learned that some members of his congregation had been diagnosed with cancer. Chupco was also trying to develop a mission outreach program into the community that could meet a specific need.

Barnett, a member of Okmulgee First Indian Baptist, wrote the proposal for the group and Chupco embraced the idea.

"I want to learn how to minister to cancer patients," Chupco said. "This group allows me to learn about the disease."

The American Cancer Society legitimizes the group. Barnett said the cancer society provides support materials, including videos, that are used by the group. She also attended a society-sponsored seminar for support group facilitators.

The format is basically the same as that of other support groups. Healthy food, prepared specifically for cancer patients, is also served. The group however, feeds on the comfort that can only be provided from others who have similar experiences.

Each participant makes an introduction and then tells of his or her respective story about life with Basic facts about cancer

What is cancer?

Cancer is a group of diseases characterized by uncontrolled growth and spread of abnormal cells. If the spread is not controlled, it can result in death.

Who gets cancer?

Anyone. Since incidence rises with age, most cases affect adults in mid-life or older. Among children ages 1-14, cancer causes more deaths in the U.S. than any other disease.

How many people alive today will get cancer?

About one in three, according to present rates, or about 85 million Americans now living will eventually get cancer.

How many new cases will there be this year?

In 1993, about 1,170,000 new cancer cases will be diagnosed. This does not include skin cancers — estimated to be 700,000 cases annually.

— American Cancer Society

Desire to help others inspires Barnett

OKMULGEE — Courage is the quality of mind or spirit that enables one to face difficulty with firmness and without fear.

Webster's defines courage. It is manifest however, in Mona Barnett.

It has been over a year since Barnett learned she had breast cancer.

She was told to get her affairs in order and to be certain that everything is in its proper place. In short, Barnett was to get ready to die.

In that time, Barnett has undergone chemotherapy and a mastectomy.

Most importantly, says Barnett, she has a more defined sense of purpose.

"I will do anything I can to help other people," Barnett said. "I want to help because I care for people."

That a single parent, afflicted with breast cancer, with five children living at home, would think of helping others seems out of character in a society that is pre-occupied with self.

Barnett however, wanted to give emotional and spiritual support to other cancer patients and especially, their loved ones.

"Lives are turned upside down when cancer is diagnosed," Barnett said. "Your family changes and life itself is different."

For Barnett, her daughter, Early Dawn Nimsey, gave her support.

"My daughter helped me make it," Barnett said. "She missed 35 days of school during the second semester of her senior year. She was going through what I was going through. It was hard on her."

Nimsey, a 1992 Okmulgee High School graduate, is now enrolled in the nursing program at Northeastern State University, Tahlequah.

Though Barnett's life has stabilized after being diagnosed with cancer, she admits that some days are much more difficult than others.

"I take it one day at a time and I deal with it as I go," Barnett said. "I'm a fighter and I don't let it get me down. Life is really short. I realize that little things are important."

cancer.

"Talking and helping one another is what this group is about," Barnett said. "We let our feelings out. There is a lot of crying and hugging."

For Barnett, getting together with other cancer survivors provides emotional release, enhances self-esteem, and allows her to draw strength from others.

For many, the group is the only opportunity for support.

Family members of cancer patients are unprepared to deal with the disruption and many of the group members tell of spouses who remain in denial about cancer even after treatment has begun.

Treatment seems to be worse than the cancer itself. Chemotherapy is the injection of chemicals that are supposed to be toxic to the cancer. Barnett calls chemotherapy poison. Some of the side effects are hair loss, vomiting, dizziness, and disorientation.

"It's a shock," Barnett said. "After chemotherapy, I would vomit for three days and go seven days without eating. Everything in your system is burned. I lost my hair, fingernails, and toenails."

Often, family members and friends are unable to cope with the physical changes that occur after chemotherapy.

Barnett would like to see more cancer patient family members and friends participate.

"I would like to start something for families who are affected by cancer," Barnett said.

"These people need to know how to provide emotional support and come to terms with their own emotions. They tell you it's all right and everything is okay, but it's not okay."

The members of this particular group have something else in common besides cancer — a renewed dedication to live life to its fullest.

Barnett echoed the sentiments of other group members when she speaks of perspective.

"I've learned that life is really short," Barnett said. "Yes, we have good days and bad days, but I'm living life one day at a time and I deal with this as I go. [But] I'm a fighter and I don't let it get me down."

The cancer group meets the third Tuesday of each month. For more information, contact Barnett at (918) 756-6211 or Mary Ann Kane at (918) 756-8700. Chupco can be contacted at Newtown United Methodist Church, (918) 756-8719.

Quarterly financial statement for quarter ending on June 30, 1993

The Muscogee (Creek) Nation Office of the Treasury, as one of its major functions, produces a series of monthly budgetary and general ledger reports on all activities and programs of the Creek Nation. These reports are made available to appropriate tribal management, personnel, and other interested parties.

The office of the treasury maintains an accounting system in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles. It meets the standards and reporting requirements of the Government Finance Officers Association and the reporting requirements as established under the A-128 Single Audit Act.

Reports prepared under these standards tend to be technical and complex by nature. They may require a more in-depth understanding of both accounting principles and fund accounting than those reports of other entities.

A summary is submitted quarterly in order to keep tribal members aware of the financial status of the Creek Nation. This statement has been prepared on a cash basis to reflect receipts and expenditures accumulated on a year-to-year basis.

Tribe opens seventh bingo hall south of Muskogee city limits open six nights a week. The hall will be closed on Mondays.

Tribal gaming commissioner, Rocky McIntosh said the facility is expected to generate more than $1 million a year.

"Due to the dedicated efforts of many Creek citizens, another positive economic development project of the nation will open July 24, 1993," McIntosh said. "This project will help better serve the needs of our people in education, health, and social services. It will also benefit the general population because of an increased tax base and increased tourism."

The facility overcame several obstacles and is now considered a showcase in the gaming industry with the latest in technology McIntosh said.

The Muskogee city council approved a contract for city services to the hall at its June 28 meeting, paving the way for completion of the bingo hall.

"We're very happy to complete our negotiations with the Creek tribe and we're very happy to have this facility in Muskogee," said mayor Kathy Hewitt. "This shows [Creek Nation believes in the economic impact Muskogee offers.]"

Hewitt and Fife signed the contract for city services June 30. The contract does not stipulate the annexation of the facility into city limits.

Since the bingo hall is on federal trust land, it cannot be annexed into the city. The tribe and city negotiated a contract within the confines of federal land.

Tribal attorney Tim Posey completed the agreement and presented it to the city council, which gave it unanimous approval.

Ken Childers and Sonny O'Hern, both members of the tribal gaming operations authority board, expressed pleasure of the agreement and with the hall opening.

"This will make an impact on the tribe and on the community of Muskogee," O'Hern said. "We'll employ 40 to 50 people and all live within a 20-mile radius of the facility. We're looking forward to the opening because it's been a long process of getting it done, but it's finally done."

He expressed his appreciation to the attorneys involved and to the National Council for its continued support of the project. O'Hern also credits Fife and his administration for using the Creek Nation Development and Construction Company to build the facility.

"I think the people will be proud of the facility knowing that our own company built it," O'Hern said.

"We're enthused about the opening of the Muskogee Bingo Hall," Childers said. "This will bring in jobs and provide income for the tribe."

Childers and O'Hern both expressed appreciation to Posey and gaming board attorney Geoffery Standingbear for helping overcome recent obstacles that delayed completion of the hall.

The facility broke ground on May 9, 1992 with excavation starting shortly after.

since 1972, but after the tribe rejected high bids from other construction firms, it was decided to reactivate the tribal company.

Ray Fish is the development and construction manager. Through the tribally owned business, several Creeks were hired to work construct the building. Additionally, American Indian businesses were given priority for supplies, services, and subcontracting.

"A lot of people thought Indian people couldn't do things like this," said the tribal executive director Jerry Wilson. "We used our own construction company and our own people to get his project completed."

Wilson said the project paid $400,000 on Indian employment.

Wilson said the project demonstrated fulfillment of tribal objectives to expand the economic development program, create jobs, generate income, and to gain experience in the construction business.

"By using our own construction company, we were able to reduce the cost of building the facility," Wilson said.

Muskogee District representative Helen Chupco also expressed pleasure at the opening of the bingo hall.

"This will give our people jobs," she said during the recent regular council meeting. "We have a lot of people who need jobs and this will help."

The tobacco was en route from Kansas bound for two tribal smokeshops. Alley said the state can keep the truck and products until the larger question of constitutionality of state law is decided. Only 12 tribes have entered into tobacco taxation compacts with the state. The Muskogee Nation is recognized as the leader among Indians throughout the nation in continuing its struggle for sovereignty, Fife said.

said festival co-chair Barton Williams.

Williams said $6,000 was earned by the $3 per car gate fee and most of the profit came from the events staying within their budget. Many were underbudget thanks to donations from employees and area merchants and individuals. Williams said 10,000 people attended the festival despite the rain that fell early Friday evening and Saturday.

Despite the weather problems, several events went on as scheduled, although with some delay. The Junior Olympics on Friday attracted 750 youths from 24 communities and three outside tribal groups, making this year's event the largest in the history of the Olympics, said Henry Harjo, coordinator of the Junior Olympics.

Fife says petition allegations baseless

OKMULGEE — Principal Chief Bill Fife says the petition for his removal filed July 8, is politically motivated and contains allegations that are baseless.

Tribal citizen James Morgan of Schuler, who filed the notice of intent to circulate a removal petition that contends Fife:

- travelled excessively;
- ignored personnel complaints against administrative management;
- authorized Second Chief Shelly Crow to take a 90-day paid leave of absence;
- allowed excessive spending by the Lighthorse Administration; and
- was negligent with the construction of the Creek Nation Muskogee Bingo Hall.

"These allegations are nothing more than exaggerated distortions of very small pieces of facts," Fife said.

Fife said it is unfortunate that a few discontented people would try to prevent progress from his administration.

"Nineteen months ago, I was greeted by an organization that was in chaos," Fife said. "My staff was offered very little help from the previous administration during the transition. Still we've managed to make progress."

regarding the allegations. Fife said all expenditures by his office were allocated in the fiscal year 1993 comprehensive budget that was approved by the National Council. Additionally, Fife said his travel has been beneficial for the tribe. For example, he has represented the Muscogee Nation and other eastern Oklahoma tribes on the Bureau of Indian Affairs reorganization task force.

He along, with 35 other tribal leaders from across the nation have been meeting quarterly for the past two years providing input into the BIA's reorganization. These meetings are financed by the federal government.

Other travel has resulted in a significant joint business venture with the Mississippi Choctaws. The Choctaw-Creek venture resulted in the tribe being one of the three finalists for a multi-million dollar contract with the superconducting supercollider project.

"Ethics dictate that I do not discuss personnel matters publicly, but procedures are in place to take corrective action if needed. However, I do support the administrative

Opothleyahola to be enshrined

by Noah Long

WETUMKA — Thomas Yahola's long-time dream will become a reality Aug. 22 in Anadarko.

Legendary Muscogee leader Opothleyahola will be inducted into the National Hall of Fame for Famous American Indians during 2 p.m. ceremonies.

It was Yahola's interest in the Creek leader — developed during his college years at Bacone — that has led to Opothleyahola's induction as the first and only Creek Indian in the Hall of Fame.

Crow to participate at national conference

by Second Chief Shelly Crow

The National Governors' Association 1993 Annual Conference will be held Aug. 15 through 17 at the Maxwell Convention Center in Tulsa. Several issues will be discussed that will affect Indian citizens of certain states.

Colorado governor Roy Romer is the association chair. President Bill Clinton and Vice President Al Gore are expected to attend.

The following are topics will be discussed:

Aug. 15 — Task force for health and a welcome reception for all meeting attendees. Also, a pow wow will be held at the Tulsa Fair Grounds following the last session;

Aug. 16 — Republican and Democratic governors association meetings and the opening session on health care reform. I will be participating on a panel to discuss health care reform that will be broadcast on KOTV channel 6 from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. Also, a task force on education will be presented.

Aug. 17 — A session on reinventing government will highlight the events on the final day of the conference.

All of these topics will impact every tribe in the United States.

We are in hopes that our governors will remember that each individual state has independent nations within their boundaries.

I hope that the education task force will address culturally sensitive issues to minorities in their particular states. Topics of language barriers for minorities and certain tests are not culturally sensitive to minority groups.

Health care topics should also be addressed concerning ethnic groups and how they should be implemented into all states' health care systems. Financing these programs will affect all citizens since minorities are taxpayers.

Letters to the editor

Citizen disclaims his involvement

Editor:

I am writing this letter concerning the petition filed against Principal Chief Bill Fife and Second Chief Shelly Crow.

I have been asked several times as to how everything is coming along with the petition. My answer to them, and to you, is — I don't have any idea.

I have been accused of being the one behind the petition, which is not true. I do not personally know this man that filed the petition and I have not discussed anything with him.

Anyone who knows me can say that I am my own person and speak for what I believe in and I cannot be intimidated into saying or doing anything I don't believe in.

I do not plan to sign the petition, but I will say that if they

Clarifications

The Muscogee (Creek) Nation quarterly financial statement appearing in the July issue of The Muscogee Nation News should have reported that the Bureau of Indian Affairs transportation improvement program has expended $32,874. Additionally, the report reflects a year-to-date base not year-to-year.

Also, the photo of Anita Kaye Barnett (at right) was omitted inadvertently from the June edition of The MNN. Barnett is an honor student in the Hanna Public School system.

Fife: "Jobs, communities, and families are my 1994 priorities."

by Principal Chief Bill Fife

By serving our citizens, empowering our families, employees and our communities, we can foster excellence and quality.

My staff and I have been planning the tribal agenda for Fiscal Year 1994, which begins Oct. 1, 1993. The agenda is a refinement of the strategic plan that was developed during the early months of my term.

I remain committed to the goals and ideas that were discussed during my campaign and I believe many people share the same sense of purpose and mission.

Specifically, my goals are:

- Reorganize the tribal programs.

This includes streamlining programs, provide employee training, and continue staff development. We must create an atmosphere and attitude that encourages tribal administrators to achieve positive results through self-motivation and imitative.

The streamlining of government will result in the elimination of unneeded programs and processes, and identifying other targets of fiscal savings.

This reorganization will be accomplished through legislative reform, executive order, deregulation, or other means as appropriate. The bottom line is that we must provide effective services delivered in an efficient manner.

- Promote healthy families.

I know how important family is and I am fortunate that I was raised in a family that offered guidance, discipline, and support. Many of the values I have today were developed and nurtured by my family.

I would like to develop programs that provide family planning, parental support services and bring together the wisdom and knowledge of elders with the enthusiasm and energy of youth.

- Provide an environment where communities can be strengthened.

The original concept of chartered communities was to develop them as full-functioning parts of the larger tribal government.

Some tribal programs have already established satellite offices in areas away from the tribal capitol.

With the technology available today, even rural communities would not have to feel removed from the tribe.

I want to see more training and technical assistance provided at the community level. We must begin facilitating leadership to communities so they may better utilize their internal resources.

- Create more jobs.

The tribe has been successful in creating employment opportunities during the first 18 months of this administration.

We have great success with our Muscogee (Creek) Nation Manufacturing Enterprises and our joint venture with the Mississippi Choctaws — Choctaw Creek Technologies — which was awarded a federal contract.

Other proposals have been developed to bring jobs and revenue to the tribe. We are seeking grant funds, businesses, and investors for the tribe, as well as identifying the basic needs of our people.

I also want to encourage individual Creek entrepreneurs to develop community and individual businesses.

- Increase educational opportunities.

The cornerstone of my 1994 goals is education.

I have made education one of the most important goals in my platform. Education is the great equalizer in this society. Though there are those that will never accept us because we are Indians, education will give us that equal opportunity to succeed and achieve.

Education is essential to improve the quality of life.

Specifically, I want to provide scholarships, assessment services, career counseling, community education, and internships with institutions of tribal government.

I know that my goals might seem very ambitious, but the people have told me these are the things they want. I also believe this tribe has the resources and the character to become greater.

Holdenville bingo closes

HOLOENVILLE — Play at the Creek Nation Holdenville bingo has ended, announced Rocky McIntosh, commissioner of the office of public gaming for the Muscogee (Creek) Nation.

McIntosh said the lack of summer attendance led to the closing of the facility.

"You just can't make it on 125 [people] daily attendance," McIntosh said. He added there are no plans to reopen the bingo hall.

With the closing, the Creek Nation now has six bingo halls in operation — Tulsa, Muskogee, Okmulgee, Checotah, Bristow, and Eufaula.

The Holdenville facility opened in February with an average attendance of 169 during February and March. Average attendance fell to 125 prompting the closing.

Health system offers optometry services

OKEMAH — Muscogee (Creek) citizens can receive huge discounts on the purchase of prescription glasses and contact lenses from the Creek Nation Health System, said Dr. Richard O. Creed, chief of optometry services.

Creed said the Creek Nation offers a median price of $65 for glasses that could cost $180 from chain stores and $158 from private offices. Soft contact lenses in other markets would cost from $175 to $275, while the tribe offers a price range from $19 to $38. Creed said the costs for rigid gas permeable contact lenses are priced from $200 to $300 elsewhere. The tribe offers a price of $78. Disposable contact lenses in the economy range from $450 to $600 per year, while the Creek Nation offers a price of $136.

Patients must schedule an appointment with the clinic and have a chart on file, or start a chart when appearing for the appointment, said secretary LaBrista Landers. Certificate degree of Indian blood (COIB) and Muscogee Nation citizenship cards are also necessary. Second Chief dismisses removal efforts OKMULGEE — Second Chief Shelly Crow refuted a removal petition alleging she has overspent funds and travelled excessively.

As one of 36 full-time consultants to the President's Health Task Force in Washington O.C., Crow took 50-days leave of absence from her position, she said. Crow contends that tribal representation at the national level is necessary.

The petition — filed by tribal citizen James Morgan of Schuler, on July 8 — also alleges, Crow:

— [was] not being available for staff and citizens by taking a 90-day leave of absence while receiving a $100 a day stipend from the Muscogee (Creek) Nation; and — has been using her office for personal gain.

As second chief, she contends she is an advocate for the Creek people. It is imperative the tribe have representation at the intertribal, state, and federal level so that its sovereignty is retained, Crow said. "Everyday there is something happening that affects this tribe; we need someone [in Washington O.C.]. You cannot stay in Okmulgee, Okla. and get anything done. We've tried that before and it doesn't work — but you go meet them face-to-face and tell them you vote."

Having been in the health care profession for 19 years, living within tribal boundaries, and understanding the needs of the people — Crow and Principal Chief Bill Fife felt her input valuable to the tribe and the task force, she said.

Because of her professional expertise, Crow's travel is usually related to health issues; she also makes economic development oriented trips, she said. Regardless of her funding source, she has always represented the tribe and other Indians living within tribal boundaries, she said.

Crow said the majority of her travel is paid by such entities as the U.S. Public Health Service, Indian Health Service, and the Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission — of which Crow serves as chair. "I've given [travel] reports to Chief and allowed accessibility to anyone," she said.

Crow contends that without her presence as a member of the task force, decisions that may have detrimentally affected health care for Creeks and other Indian people would have gone unchallenged. Among topics of discussion were integrating the Indian Health Service and the Veterans Administration, she said. If this had occurred tribal clinics could have either been closed or been opened up to the VA.

"I told them they could combine the Department of Defense and VA because they are employees of the government. [They did not realize] that we are citizens of our own nation with treaties with the [U.S.]."

Other issues that Crow challenged were discussions of contributing P.L. 93-638 funds — received yearly by tribes for health services — to the states, she said. The tribe receives eight million dollars per year in funds for health, "I told [President] Clinton we need 50 million."

Through networking with the President, Crow said she was able to obtain Fife and tribal director of health Ed Mouss a consultation with assistant secretary of health Or. Phillip Lee. During the appointment, Mouss was afforded

Council rejects Head Start reorganization

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Efforts to reorganize the Head Start program will continue after the Muscogee (Creek) National Council voted down a plan during its regular meeting July 31.

Citing an incompleteness to the bill, the council voted down the reorganization measure by a 13-9 margin following a 30-minute debate.

The bill would have allowed a parent policy council to be composed of representatives from the Head Start communities of Eufaula, Yeager, Sapulpa, Okmulgee and one member at large to govern the Head Start staff and its operations, while allowing the tribe to function as a flow through for funding and the National Council as a monitor of the program.

Okmulgee District representative Harvey Gilroy said he will introduce a bill that will provide all the necessary changes to improve the Head Start program.

Gilroy was joined by Okfuskee, Okmulgee and Muskogee representatives Mae Jackson, George Tiger and veteran representative Helen Chupco in voicing opposition to the bill.

Both representatives said the bill needed to say more about a complete reorganization.

"The only thing I'm against is that it's not complete," Gilroy said. "I have a bill coming up that is complete that will take care of every item."

He received support from Jackson during the debate.

"In this particular bill, we've heard from the employees and the representatives," Jackson said. "Because of that, I'm not clear on the situation and I see a lot of people, but we haven't heard from them. This bill is not all that clear to me, so I'll have to vote against it."

Muskogee representative Chupco said the Muscogee Nation is the grantee of the Head Start program and should have a major role in the direction of the program.

"This bill does not clearly define the findings and purposes," Chupco said. "I don't believe the parent committee has been fully informed about this bill. The grantee is still the Creek Nation. This ordinance is not polished like it should be."

Speaking for the reorganization bill were Tulsa representative Steve Bruner and Pat Kelly along with McIntosh representative Judy Roberts.

"There needs to be reorganization," Bruner said. "This involves the Indian parents and we all agree the Head Start program is needed."

"People think if this bill passes that the Head Start program becomes an entity in itself," he said. "Quite the contrary. The National Council will still be the monitor of the program."

Both Kelly and Roberts stated their support of the bill in its present form because reorganization is needed to meet federal guidelines.

In other business, the council approved funding bills for orthodontic care, renovation funds for the Yardeka nutrition program, home improvements bill, and funds to improve tribal facilities.

pursue other work with my tribe," Alexander said of assuming the role as tax commissioner. "Both my father and uncle served our tribe in various capacities in the 1950s and there are many memories of Saturdays spent on the lawn of the old council building in downtown Okmulgee while the elders met. Accordingly, it is an honor to be so considered (for the office)."

Alexander is a graduate of Northeastern State University, Tahlequah and has a degree in business administration. He also has accumulated graduate hours at Oklahoma University.

He is married and has three daughters ranging in age from three to 18 years old.

He entered the public accounting field in 1973 in Muskogee. Alexander then joined the state's largest CPA firm in Oklahoma City in 1976. He joined a Tulsa firm in 1980 that had emphasis in the oil and gas businesses.

In 1982, Alexander formed his own practice in Tulsa where he specialized in the oil and gas business. He also formed a small oil and gas business that drilled and operated wells for four years.

Food distribution manager wins national recognition

DKMULGEE — Charley LaSarge, manager of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation commodity warehouse, has been awarded a national honor.

LaSarge, of Okmulgee, was recognized by the National Association of Food Distributors on Indian Reservations during the national meeting held recently in Denver. The award was for providing efficient food distribution to tribal members.

LaSarge has been the manager of the food distribution program since May 1985. He is responsible for a $2 million annual operation to serve more than 3,200 clients per month. The tribe however, spends only $120,000 annually for operation of the program with the federal government covering the remaining portion.

In addition to his tribal duties, LaSarge also serves as the first vice president of the national organization, serves as the southwest regional vice president for Oklahoma and New Mexico, is president of the action committee for the tribes, and is on the advisory committee for the southwest tribes.

Donations of 700 gallons of drinking water was recently donated by the Creek Nation Tulsa Bingo for use by the elderly in Okmulgee. When word was received of Okmulgee's water problem, the Tulsa bingo hall gathered 700 gallons of water from its customers during a special game said gaming operations authority board member Ken Childers. Jackie Jimerson and Andria Cutnose delivered the water to the tribal headquarters where tribal employees Bill Dowdy and Danny Roberts unloaded the water for delivery.

Creek-Yuchi to play semi-pro football

TULSA — A Creek-Yuchi citizen hopes a gamble in football pays off.

Brian Rowe will be playing a big role in the formation a Tulsa's semi-professional football team, the Gamblers.

Rowe at 6-4, 315 pounds, is one of the biggest players for the newly-formed Gamblers.

Rowe is the son of Jack and Georgina Rowe and the grandson of National Council representative Mose Cahwee.

The Gamblers will open the season with an exhibition game in Tahlequah then travel to Louisiana to begin league play.

Rowe easily won a playing position with the Gamblers during summer tryouts. Several hopeful gridders tried out for the team, but Rowe was told from their first practice he would have no problem in winning a spot on the team.

"It's great being out on the field again," Rowe said. Rowe played high school football for Eufaula, while living at the tribal-operated Eufaula boarding school dorm.

Rowe is slated to play the offensive tackle position.

His cousin, Kenneth Watashe was the main mover in landing Rowe on the team.

"Kenneth went to the first tryout and the coach asked him if he knew of any other big men that could play," Rowe said. "He then got me to come to a tryout and they told me I could play for them. Me and Kenneth are the two biggest guys on the team."

Watashe, a 1986 Kellyville High School graduate, said he found out about the team from a friend, Scooter Webb, who played for Tulsa University. However, Watashe has since left the squad to continue his job.

The first game of the season is scheduled for Aug. 14 in Louisiana. The Gamblers first home game is Aug. 28 against the Wichita Flyers at LaFortune Stadium.

Tribe makes presentation for Childers statue

by Noah Long

BROKEN ARROW — Scott Graham remembers the pride he felt watching Ernest Childers return home after Childers had received the congressional medal of honor in World War II.

Since that time Graham has led a community-wide effort to erect a statue of Childers in recognition for his heroic feat in battle.

Graham's dream of a downtown park with the Childers statue moved a step closer with the presentation of a $15,000 check from the Muscogee (Creek) Nation to the Broken Arrow Rotary Club Foundation.

The funds for the Childers statue were appropriated by the National Council from unexpended bingo revenues.

Principal Chief Bill Fife made the presentation Aug. 2 to the club.

"You are one of our most important citizens," Fife said to Childers at the luncheon. "We are very proud of you."

Childers said he was honored by the gesture.

Childers was awarded the congressional medal of honor for his effort in destroying two German machine gun nests, two snipers and for capturing a German soldier — all done without any ammunition.

"I was with the 180th Company C of the 45th Division," Childers said. "That was an all Indian company. We were all from Chillicothe Indian School. The company on our other side was the 179th Company from Pawnee."

Childers, now 75 years old, lives in Broken Arrow and remains active.

Joining Fife in the presentation were Second Chief Shelly Crow, and National Council representatives Steve Bruner (Wagoner-Mayes-Rogers) and George Tiger (Okmulgee).

Fife said the construction of the Muskogee bingo hall by the Creek Nation Construction and Development Company was endorsed and supported by the National Council.

"This project proved that we can compete in the construction business and use our own Indian labor force. Who can argue with that? Some may have rather have non-Indians do the construction," Fife said.

"At that time, we anticipated some problems with construction because it was the first major job of the tribal construction company," Fife said.

Additional delays were the result of unreasonable rainfall.

"However, the experience that we gained in building the hall is invaluable. We also saved money on construction costs by doing it ourselves and we put a lot of Creeks to work."

Fife also noted that the hall opened July 24 to a full house.

Jess Kelley, chair of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Election Board, said the Council and the board will certify the petitioners' signatures. The petition will then be presented to the tribal Supreme Court Chief Justice. The presiding justice will then decide if the petition complaints merit National Council consideration.

It will take a three-fourths vote (24 members) of the Coun-

Community gives confidence vote

TWIN HILLS — Principal Chief Bill Fife and his administration were given a "vote of confidence" by the Twin Hills Indian community.

The community voted 24-0 in support of Chief Fife said National Council representative A.D. Ellis. Ellis said there was no formal written resolution, but simply a voice motion and vote by a show of hands.

"The vote came up at our [July 27] meeting because of all the bad news the Creeks are getting over the petition to oust the chief and second chief," Ellis said. "A community member said we ought to give chief Fife and the administration a vote of confidence because they were voted in by the people for four years to serve and they ought to be given a chance."

cil for removal.

Those circulating the petitions will have until Sept. 5 to collect 2,421 signatures of registered voters which equals 20 percent of the electorate.

Marshall Hardin, a supporter of the removal drive, said more than 3,500 voters have signed the petition, though that has not been substantiated. Hardin of Okmulgee, said the petitioners' goal is to have 8,000 signatures.

and when I attended Bacone I wrote a thesis [about] him," Yahola said. His research gave Yahola the inspiration he needed to complete his education and to overcome obstacles in his life.

"He became a role model for me," Yahola said. "I received inspiration from his life."

Upon learning that no Creek has ever been inducted into Anadarko's National Hall of Fame for Famous American Indians, Yahola contacted the board and requested the necessary forms to nominate Opothleyahola.

"I appeared before the board last August and presented material on Opothleyahola and I also presented a letter from Chief [Bill] Fife supporting the nomination," Yahola said. "The board then voted to induct Opothleyahola this year."

Yahola was then told he had to find the funding for a sculpture to create a bust of Opothleyahola. With support from Fife and National Council representative Thomas Berryhill, a bill was passed to allocate funds for the sculpture and two busts.

While one bust will be displayed in Anadarko, the second will be located at the tribal complex in Okmulgee with a possible fall installation ceremony.

Yahola is urging as many Tuckabatchee tribal town members to attend. Opothleyahola was a member of that town. Yahola requested any descendants to notify him for recognition.

Opothleyahola's leadership role started in the 1820's when he opposed the ceding of lands for removal. He was part of the council that ordered the execution of William McIntosh for signing the Treaty of Indian Springs — the removal act.

When forcible removal occurred it appeared the Creeks would go to war against the United States. However, he led a peaceful movement of the people to the Indian Territory in the 1830's.

"He was able to give time for the ceremonial grounds to move in the proper way to the Indian Territory," Yahola said.

do get the required amount of signatures then the council should take a good look at all the allegations.

I am not a hard person to find, so if anyone wants to know the truth then all they have to do is ask me, and not listen to rumors or make their decisions on the basis of whom I associate with or who they see me talking to.

I hear that I am supposed to be mad at Crow because of some silly incident. I am not mad, but you believe whatever you desire to believe. I am much more mature than that. I am available at anytime to answer any questions that you want to ask me. I can't promise to give you the answers that you want to hear because I have to be honest.

Felix Haynes, Okmulgee

"The number of signatures does not reflect the validity of the allegations," Fife said.

Attempts to contact Morgan were unsuccessful.

"If there is a need for me to respond to any of these allegations, I will do so in the proper tribal forum at the proper time. Until then, I remain committed to serve and will continue to do the job the people elected me to do," Fife said.

Crow seeking reform

We realize that President Clinton is basing some of his future plans for the states with the concept of decentralizing governments to the lowest level — the states. After reading the book Reinventing Government, this is a great direction.

One must realize there are politics even at most state levels and creation of programs must go even lower than the states — counties, cities, and tribal governments could better serve all Americans.

I would like for the governors' association to address the following questions:

— How do we build consensus for real health care reform?

— What can we learn from the efforts of states to redesign government and how can we expand the reform movement to every level of government?; and — How do we motivate the public to support the kind of educational system we need for tomorrow's citizens?

Tough questions for all of us to answer. It appears that our tribal leaders have the same task before them to lead our citizens into the 21st century.

There is a cost to attend the conference. For more information, contact (202) 624-5330.

Council report

- By unanimous vote (22-0) the council approved funding of $80,000 to the orthodontic program from the bingo revenue account.

- The council approved $20,000 from the dissolution of the Creek Construction Co. to remodel the Yardeka Community Center to house a nutrition program for the elderly. The bill had been tabled pending a budget on the renovation project.

- A $50,000 home improvement bill was also passed.

The bill would allow up to $2,000 for the repair of Creek citizens' homes. The funds are limited to those WHO meet income guidelines as currently used by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development program and it does not include Creek Nation Housing Authority mutual help homes.

- A bill appropriating $22,703 for capital improvements passed by a 20-2 vote. Principal Chief Bill Fife said the funds would be used to install a new roof at the Oakdale facility, improve the parking lot at the elderly housing project as well as general repairs on tribal property.

- A bill authorizing the donation of two surplus police cars to the Hughes County Sheriff's department.

- A bill approving the repeal and amending of election codes correcting a technical error and to post results of absentee ballots when counting is completed.

- The council also set dates for the regular and special sessions of the council, and they also established a new time for the planning session.

The planning session had been held 10 days prior to the council meeting, but a new bill amended at the meeting, calls for the planning session to be held the Tuesday before the council meeting. The bill passed by a 12-10 vote.

- The Edmond accounting firm of Arledge and Associates was approved to conduct the annual 1993 audit.

- The election board presented 10 names to be counters of absentee ballots.

They are Georgia Harjo and Louise King both of the Okmulgee District; Inda McGertt and LaVerna Deere both of the Okfuskee District; Charles Lewis and Sharon Lewis both of the McIntosh District; Wesley Randall of the Wagoner District; Lela Goodman and Susie Lindsey both of the Hughes District; and Thurman Ragsdale of the Tulsa District.

Opothleyahola was instrumental in organizing the Council of 1840, a meeting which drew 1,500 representatives to unite the two factions of the tribe under a single council.

He also led 10,000 Creeks, Seminoles, Delawares, Shawnees, Kickapoos, and freedmen to Kansas during the Civil War. After encountering two Confederate attacks, his group was defeated at the Battle of Hoiny Falls. Survivors made their way into Kansas where he organized hunting and farming expeditions and spent what was left of his personal fortune to buy food. Weakened by exposure and poor nutrition, Opothleyahola died and was buried with great ceremony in an unmarked grave in Kansas.

Crow denies allegations

the opportunity to present his health care model for the tribe. "[Lee] was impressed with the Creek Nation health care model," she said. It could result in the tribal health care model being used as a national pilot project — thus providing additional funding for tribal health care services, she said.

In February both Crow and Fife sent memorandums notifying National Council Speaker Clarence Cloud of her leave of absence. "If — at anytime — I am needed back at the tribe for emergencies, I will return immediately," stated Crow's letter to Cloud. "I made every effort to let people know I was going. I made every effort to see that my job was complete before leaving." Crow said she returned to the nation four times during the course of her 50-day leave.

Crow said the $100 per day stipend she received from the tribe will be repaid by Sept. 30 — the last day of FY 93. As a member of the task force she cannot "double dip" as it is one of the stipulations she was sworn to by the U.S. Ethics Committee.

"It's very depressing because your sitting there fighting for your tribe and you've got people at home filing petitions. It reminds me of the Vietnam vets returning and some people did not welcome them home.

"If someone wants to get me out of office I wish they'd do it [during the 1995 election] so as not to disrupt the image of the tribe while we are trying to obtain state [gaming] compacting and grants. It's hard to ask for funding from Congress when the tribe has a bad image.

"There is a cemetery in Washington D.C., where Indian leaders went to D.C. to fight for their people. While in D.C., they died and never made it back. You don't read of any petition or removal while they were serving their people.

"Also, the president and vice president are coming to Oklahoma for the national governors' association meeting. Should we get up a petition to remove them?"

Housing authority to begin $4.8 million mutual help home remodeling project

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — More than $4.8 million has been awarded to the Creek Nation Housing Authority to remodel existing mutual help homes, announced executive director Joe Jackson.

Jackson said the funds from a comprehensive grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) will allow for the complete renovation of 114 homes this year. The funds will cover a five-year period in which the housing authority hopes will eventually renovate 1,400 of the mutual help homes in the Creek Nation.

The first homes to be affected by the grant are 13 which house disabled citizens, said Geri Berryhill, project director. Construction contracts are expected to be awarded by Oct. 1.

The 114 homes in this year's budget have already been identified through an assessment program conducted in 1992 by the Muscogee (Creek) Nation. Homes affected are those built in the early 1970s when the first housing authority homes were constructed.

Jackson said the eligibility requirements for the project are to be current in making monthly payments and-or have made pay back arrangements.

Homes that were paid in full prior to June, 1992 are not eligible for the program, Jackson said.

Renovation of the houses will correct construction or design deficiencies. In some cases, that work will include the correcting of foundations and complete remodeling.

"This is a one-time project," Jackson said. "Never have funds been allowed to repair these homes. This is a unique program and we will probably never have this kind of project again."

He said HUD has never allowed maintenance funds until the past year, when the grant became available.

"If anyone has any questions about the program they should call us and we will answer those questions," Jackson said.

Jackson said the program follows a systematic procedure required by HUD.

"We can't renovate homes randomly," Jackson said. "We must follow the proce-

Housing authority receives funding for 150 new homes

OKMULGEE — Creek Nation Housing Authority executive director Joe Jackson and chair of the board of commissioners Ken Childers, announced the funding of 150 new housing units by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

"This funding award represents the culmination of many months of hard work and the joint effort on the part of the board of commissioners and the housing authority staff," Jackson said. "We are pleased that all our hard work has now reaped such great benefits for our organization and our people."

The housing authority currently has a waiting list of over 500 families for the mutual help homeowners program.

"This new allocation of housing will allow us to meet some of the tremendous demand for housing that presently exists throughout the Creek Nation," Jackson said.

The funding is the largest allocation of new housing units received since 1982 and it is the first since 1989.

The mutual help home ownership program allows families to buy homes from the authority. House payments are based upon their income.

"For many working families, this is the only opportunity dures HUD sets out and follow the plan we submitted in the grant proposal. If anyone has questions of any kind, our line of communication is always open."

Extensive renovation may require some residents to relocate. the housing authority will provide moving costs and for all relocation expenses.

"If families have to move out while their home is being remodeled, we will provide the money to move them into other tribal housing, public housing, or any other housing units," Jackson said. He said if families, or individuals decide to move in with relatives or other family members, the authority will provide living expenses.

Eugene Thomas, an eight-year employee of the housing authority, will be the modernization coordinator. Thomas will be responsible for the field work, inspection, and relocation of home owners.

Inspectors are expected to return to the homes identified in the first year of the program to reassess the work needed.

Homeowners with questions are urged to call the housing authority at (918) 756-8504.

"Our intent is to work with the homeowners," Jackson said.

Reader wants cultural section

Editor:

The good news is I am part Creek Indian. The bad news is my grandmother, Thelma Thomas, granddaughter of Emma Perryman, passed away several years ago and took with her, her stories.

Unfortunately, living here in Nebraska, the only information about customs and traditions available to me are about the plains Indians. You can imagine how eager I am to read The Muscogee Nation News when it arrives.

After reading the two letters in your last issue that were directed at keeping the knowledge alive, it occurred to me — what about having a special section just for teachings? Just for story-telling?

This would be just another way to pass it on. I know to me the contribution would be immeasurable.

Barb Anglen, Omaha, Neb.

Editor's note: There are three difficult conditions that must be met before cultural items can be included in The MNN. One, a curriculum must be developed so that we can have measurable objectives and specific purposes for the items. Two, the authenticity of the cultural items must be established. Three, someone other than The MNN will have to assume such responsibilities. Be assured that the tribal cultural education department is working to utilize The MNN for cultural education.

Rotarians thank tribe for contribution

Editor:

On behalf of the Broken Arrow Rotary Club and the citizens of Broken Arrow, I want to thank the Muscogee Nation for your $15,000 contribution to the Ernest Childers Memorial Fund. As I believe you are aware, that puts us within $35,000 of our goal, and I believe shortly we will be able to announce another gift in the amount of $10,000.

As you know, Jay Morrish is working on the landscape plan for the park and work has already begun by the City of Broken Arrow to clear the park area for landscaping.

The significance of your gift is of such importance to our endeavor that it makes me unequal to the task of expressing my appreciation. It goes to the very roots of our community, and the history, and the nobility of the Creek Nation.

I shall keep you informed as to future events and look forward to participating with you in the unveiling of the statue when it comes to fruition.

Reader counters McIntosh death

Editor:

This refers to Vol. 22, Issue 7 of The Muscogee Nation News (July 1993), and specifically to the article on page three relating to achievements of Opothleyahola. I take exception to the remark that alludes to the assassination of William McIntosh as a noteworthy accomplishment.

It appears with every generation someone feels it is essential to cast aspersions on the character of William McIntosh, now deceased for 168 years.

Opothleyahola, in my opinion, was a leader of considerable merit and certainly due recognition. He also had his share of bad moments, which are a matter of public record. Consider his trip to Washington D.C., as an emissary of his people, instructed to persuade the government to reverse their stand and allow all Creeks to stay on their homesteads. Failing this, he was so disconsolate as to attempt suicide in the hotel room. Failing this also, he and the legendary Menawa ended up riding alongside the federal troops, men whom they detested, to root out their blood brother Seminoles from the Florida swamps for the forced removal west. At least Menawa had the courage to say he was sorry for his part in McIntosh's death and that it was a mistake. In retrospect, just what did slaying McIntosh accomplish?

William McIntosh was a man of vision when he signed the 1825 Treaty on behalf of the Lower Creeks. He was selling off his property to head west when killed. It took 170 brave warriors to do this, including the pillage and burning of the home.

It was the McIntosh faction, who came first in 1828, that fed the starving Muscogees on their arrival in the 1830's.

How sad that it is not known where Opothleyahola resided in Indian Territory so a historical marker could be placed, and equally sad no one knows where his grave lies so a fitting monument could be installed.

Moore couple looking for art works

Editor:

For many years we have researched the customs and cultures, myths, magic, and folklore of the American Indian. The chiefs, warriors, medicine men, and women, healers, artists, and storytellers have always been fascinating.

We design a lot of American Indian art and hope it reflects some of our knowledge and heritage of the American Indian. Since we are retired we have decided to sell some of our work.

We would like to contact individuals in your area that would be interested in selling us, wholesale, any finished products of American Indian art or of southwest design. We would also consider selling on a consignment basis. We don't know how to obtain a list like this.

We are fairly new to this business and are interested in any information about newsletters, powwows that offer arts and crafts booths, trading posts in your area, and a list of addresses of other tribes in Oklahoma.

Please feel free to contact us at: (405) 799-3533 or write, 716 Woodhollow Lane, Moore, OK 73160.

Tulsa police chief thanks tribe

Editor:

On behalf of the Tulsa Police Department, I want to take this opportunity to thank Creek Nation Tulsa Bingo for the generous and heartfelt donation to the camcorders for cops effort. As you know, this program was initiated by Gloria DeMier after the murder of officer Constantine George "Gus" Spanos.

The loss of this fine officer deeply affected the citizens of Tulsa, as evidenced by the overwhelming response we have received. It is our hope that equipping patrol vehicles with camcorders will increase the safety of our officers and serve as a deterrent to criminal activity in Tulsa.

Thank you again for the generous contribution to this worthwhile cause.

Silver Springs pastor thanks tribe

Editor:

We received your most generous gift of $2,000 for renovation of some of our facilities. Your generosity will enable us to make some much needed repairs to our entrance drive and construct the parking lot we have sought for so many years. Additionally, it makes possible the completion of our classroom building project which will divide it into three separate rooms and replace the roof.

We will comply with your requirements and mail receipts for the repairs when all projects are completed. We will also provide photos of the finished products.

We wanted to take this opportunity to say thank you for your thoughtfulness and assistance. We welcome all of you to join us in one of our Sunday services.

Former board member writes thanks

Editor:

Because my term is expiring, I want to say thank you to the Muscogee (Creek) National Council and Principal Chief Bill Fife for giving me the opportunity to serve the Creek people on the tribal election board for the past year and one-half. Throughout my term, we as an election board and staff have accomplished many tasks. The updating of tribal elections has been made possible through the use of modern technology via automated voting machines for the fall election of National Council representatives.

I appreciate the dedication and moral support received from fellow board members and office staff. I wish the present election board and staff success in the years to come.

Fife elected to museum board

MUSKOGEE — Muscogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief Bill Fife has been elected to serve on the executive committee of the Five Civilized Tribes Museum.

Fife and the chiefs of the Five Civilized Tribes also have agreed to serve on the board, said Marty Hagerstand, board president. Fife will serve with Hagerstand, vice presidents Eddie Jeffries and Betty Whitehorn, treasurer Sue Gaston, assistant treasurer Gloria Schumann, and secretary Lucille Wilcoxon.

The board has been in turmoil in recent months regarding museum operations and administration, but Hagerstand expressed hope that the new organization of the board will improve matters. Among the major changes made are that different board members will chair the various committees and all checks must have two signatures.

Skeeter hired as tribal economic planner

OKMULGEE — Andrew Skeeter has been named economic developer, planner-specialist for the Muscogee (Creek) Nation.

Skeeter will be responsible for exploring, locating, and engaging industries for the Creek Nation.

"The Creek Nation is in prime position to land major industries, and I'm glad to become a part of this venture," Skeeter said. "My role is to look for business opportunities for the tribe."

Skeeter said the involvement of the National Council and the administration make the Creek Nation a prime candidate for new industries.

"Having both levels of government working together with the National Council and the administration involved in the process puts the Creek Nation in position to look at new economic ventures."

Skeeter, a native of the Duck Creek area, is a graduate of Liberty Mounds High School and 1964 graduate of Northeastern State University with a business administration degree.

He has worked as an accountant and most recently operated his own certified public accounting firm in Tulsa.

He has also worked with various Indian tribes in South Dakota, Minnesota, New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma.

Hughes District representative ouster sought

HOLDENVILLE — A petition seeking the removal of Hughes District National Council representative L.C. Franks has been filed with the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Election Board.

The officers of the Holdenville Indian Community filed the petition intent with the election board on July 30. The petition requires 301 signatures by Oct. 30 to begin the removal process.

The petition lists one complaint against Franks. It alleges Franks has been passing a petition calling for the lifting of the community's charter and that the Holdenville center be closed.

"We feel his action to close the Holdenville center violates his duties and responsibilities to the Creek citizens of Holdenville and Hughes County as well as all citizens of the Creek Nation," said Mitchell Musgrove, Holdenville community chair.

Franks was elected to the Council in 1991. Attempts to reach Franks for comment were unsuccessful.

Resolution Trust Corporation seeks American Indian buyers for homes

KANSAS CITY — American Indians are being targeted for home ownership through a special program by the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC).

The RTC has the congressional responsibility for selling properties from failed savings and loans throughout the country. Single family housing units are included in the liquidation.

The Muscogee (Creek) Nation has become a main participant in the RTC home ownership program and has arranged to host a buyer awareness program for Indian citizens.

Bonnie M. King, executive director of Chelsea Affordable Housing, Inc., Kansas City, which serves as a technical assistance advisor for the RTC, has a goal of selling 130 homes in Oklahoma.

King, a member of the Osage Tribe of Oklahoma, is launching a massive marketing campaign to help families and individuals purchase homes.

"There are 130 homes for sale in Oklahoma valued at $67,500 or less for low-to-moderate income families," King said. "Through our buyer awareness program we can show Indian people how to buy these homes."

Three live auctions are scheduled in Oklahoma during September. The first will be held Sept. 23 in Tulsa, followed by an auction in Oklahoma City Sept. 28. The third will be in Lawton on Sept. 30. A sealed bid auction will be held Oct. 5.

Buyer awareness seminars at all three locations will be conducted prior to the auctions.

The Tulsa seminar will be at 7 p.m. Sept. 13 and at 1 a.m.

7 p.m. Sept. 21 — all at the Sheraton Kensington Hotel.

The Oklahoma City buyer awareness seminar is scheduled for 7 p.m. Sept. 24 and 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. Sept. 27. The Lawton seminar will be at 7 p.m. Sept. 20 and at 7 p.m. Sept. 29 at the Howard Johnson Hotel.

King said the main purpose of the program is to target the type of buyer that didn't think he or she could buy a home. Those individuals and families with low-to-moderate incomes are often priced out of the market.

"If people have bankruptcy or if they're single mothers with children, we may be able to help them buy a home," King said. "[Resolution Trust Corporation] loan underwriting standards are often more flexible than many banks and savings and loans.

"We know that American Indians have little or no knowledge of how to make a bid or how much to bid on these homes, so we will be conducting buyer awareness seminars that will teach potential buyers how to make a bid and how to determine how much to bid," King said.

Potential buyers must have $500 in earnest money to place a bid. Those who are successful in the bidding will apply the $500 to the down payment. Down payments range from three percent to five percent of the sales price. Resolution Trust Corporation offers fixed rate financing to purchase a home. Resolution Trust Corporation is providing up to 30-year loans at seven and three-eighths percent interest to qualified buyers.

Fife vetos upheld, Head Start bill postponed

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Principal Chief Bill Fife won three of four vetos, the Head Start program was put on hold, and Muscogee (Creek) Nation voters will have a chance to trim the size of the National Council in the future.

All those matters were decided upon by the National Council during its regular monthly meeting Aug. 28.

The only veto measure that survived council voting was a measure for the appointment of Gaming Operations Authority Board members.

Fife said the measure failed to amend another section of the bill that states board members commissioned by the Chief shall have no vote in meetings until confirmed by the Council. Fife said such a measure could mean the gaming board may not have a "fully functioning board."

Two other vetos that withstood the council vote also involved the gaming industry.

One veto stopped the Council from creating a new authority with similar duties as the gaming operations authority board. The motion to override the veto failed by five votes, 17-9. A vote of two-thirds of the council members (22) is necessary for an override.

The final veto to survive prevented the dissolving of the Gaming Operations Board. The council voted 18 for the override of the veto and eight to let it stand. A vote of 22 was necessary for the override.

However, the two bills regarding dissolving the board and the creation of a new board will be reconsidered at the September regular meeting.

The final veto measure to stand concerned the posting of absentee ballot results. Chief Fife said an early posting of the absentee results before the polls are closed would have undue influence on voters.

The council voted 25-0 to allow the veto to stand.

With a crowd of over 100 parents and children, the Council voted to table a bill outlining the policy and procedures for the Head Start program.

Tulsa District representative Larry Bible presented the motion to table the Head Start proposal. He urged both sides of the issue, the Head Start parent policy council and the tribal administration, to meet and reach a compromise before the Council votes on the issue.

The Council passed the motion to table the Head Start measure by a 23-2 margin. Bible, nor the Council, set a specific time for the parties involved to bring a compromise measure back to the Council.

A bill to reduce the number of National Council representatives easily passed by a 22-3 margin, paving the way for the bill to be on the ballot of this year's election.

However, if the bill passes by a two-thirds margin from the voters, it would go into effect in two years — the 1995 election.

The measure is a constitutional amendment requiring the two-thirds majority by the National Council and a vote of the people.

The new bill allows for one house, and one representative from each of the eight districts, and one additional representative for each 1,100 citizens. That amends the present bill, which allows one additional representative for each 1,000 citizens.

Under the proposed measure, a cap of 26 representatives would be set. There are 31 representatives currently. This year, voters will elect 36.

Under the current policy, Okmulgee and Tulsa will elect seven representatives each this year, followed by five from McIntosh, four each from Creek, Okfuskee, and Hughes, with the Muscogee and the Wagoner-Rogers-Mayes elect

ANADARKO — Opothleyahola's spirit was rekindled among his people when his name was added to the National Hall of Fame for Famous American Indians on Aug. 22.

The legendary leader of the Muscogee people was inducted into the hall by Muscogee (Creek) Nation Principal Chief Bill Fife, tribal National Council representative Thomas Berryhill, and by a descendant, Thomas Yahola of Wetumka.

Yahola's son, named after the Muscogee leader, Opothle had the honor of unveiling the bronze bust of his namesake.

Speaking before over 100 Muscogee citizens and guests at the induction, Yahola recanted stories and legends of Opothleyahola.

"The Creator had blessed Opothleyahola because there was much for him to do for his people," Yahola said. "He had a tremendous burden to bear, but with the help of Epofvkv (Great Spirit) he did. Through a vision he had as a medicine man, he knew where to move his people, even though he never saw the Indian Territory before."

Yahola said today the Muscogee people still carry on the traditions that were made during the years of the removal.

"He knew the we had to re-establish our tribal towns in the new land and he wanted to make the move in the proper way," Yahola said of the re-establishment of tribal towns.

"As Muscogee people we can say that Opothleyahola is the father of our country," Yahola said. "Because he re-established our towns and he wrote documents for unity among our people."

Wearing a white crane feather in his hat, Yahola said the feather is a Muscogee peace symbol.

"I wore the white crane feather in my hat when I came before the [hall of fame] board last year and requested Opothleyahola be considered for this honor," Yahola said. "I told the board I come in peace of the Muscogee people."

In his remarks before the audience, Fife praised Opothleyahola's desire to unite the Muscogee people.

"He spoke of unity," Chief Fife said. "He was responsible for uniting our Muscogee people and he knew what Legendary Muscogee leader Opothleyahola was enshrined into the National Hall of Fame for Famous American Indians, located in Anadarko. Thomas Yahola, a descendant and leader in installing Opothleyahola into the hall, gave the honor of unveiling the bust to his son, Opothle Yahola.

the Civil War would do to our people."

Also making remarks was Berryhill, who introduced the principal guests at the induction, which included: tribal town members; ceremonial ground members; National Council members; Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation Marva Jackson; and descendants of Opothleyahola.

In a final tribute of Muscogee tradition, John Proctor smoked the statue of Opothleyahola in calling upon Epofvkv to bless the monument.

Opothleyahola becomes the 37th American Indian to be inducted into the National Hall of Fame for Famous American Indians.

Menominee member named Indian affairs secretary

WASHINGTON — Ada Oer was confirmed as the U.S. Department of the Interior Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs by the U.S. Senate Aug. 20.

The former Menominee tribal chair was sworn in by Interior secretary Bruce Babbitt after the Senate confirmed her nomination.

She is the first woman assistant secretary for Indian affairs and the sixth to fill the post, created in 1977. All past appointees have been American Indian.

The Wisconsin native and enrolled member of the Menominee tribe told members of the committee that Indian policy must be coordinated closely between the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Department of the Interior, other cabinet departments and the White House.

"To this end, secretary Babbitt has reached an agreement with the White House Domestic Policy Council that it will assume an active role in coordinating administration policy initiatives to benefit American Indian people," Deer said.

Deer has endorsed the self-governance demonstration project and publication of the regulations implementing the 1988 Public Law 93-638 amendments that have been in the making for five years.

She also endorsed the Native American Free Exercise of Religion Act and she also talked about the BIA.

"We must remember that the bureau was created by non-Indians," Oer said. "It has not been a pro-active Indian institution. I want to activate and to mobilize people in the bureau so that they can be creative and forward-looking."

Deer said Indians constitute 90 percent of the employees in the BIA.

"I want the Indian values of sharing, caring, and respect incorporated into their day-to-day work," she said. "I want to help the BIA be a full partner in the effort to fulfill the Indian agenda developed in Indian country."

Okmulgee women's softball team wins national tournament

INVERMERE, British Columbia — The Okmulgee Indian Community Womens Fast Pitch Softball Team recently captured the National Indian Fast Pitch Championship.

Sponsored by OIC, the team rallied from the loser's bracket in the double elimination tournament to defeat Santa Rosa, Calif. 2-1 and 10-0 for the championship, completed early Sunday morning, Aug. 22.

The OIC team placed three players on the all-tournament team, including pitcher Carol Dawson, who was named most valuable player of the tournament. Dawson is a graduate of Preston High School and also played collegiate ball at Northeastern A&M and Northwest Missouri State University. Named to the all-tournament team were Oebbie Burgess, centerfield, and Robyn White, catcher, head coach Charley LaSarge said.

Prior to the national meet, the OIC team won three tournaments and placed second in the Oklahoma All-Indian Fast Pitch Tournament, held in Oklahoma City. They captured tournament titles at Bristow, Sooner State, and the Creek Festival. They received second place in the Oklahoma City meet, where they incurred two losses.

LaSarge said the last time the Okmulgee team played in a national tournament was in 1988 when they took runner-up honors. That tournament was played in Albuquerque, N.M.

"These girls have been playing together for four or five years," LaSarge said. He has been coaching the team for three years, two in succession.

The team was the only team from the central section of the United States entered in the tournament.

"The only people from Oklahoma were those of us who rode in four vehicles," LaSarge said. "But, we had people rooting for us in that final game."

The team raised funds from donations and various benefits to make the 40-hour drive to British Columbia.

The long trip played a role in the first loss of the tournament. They dropped a 2-1 decision to Bishop, Calif. After that game OIC rolled past Oshweken, Ontario 6-

Methodist minister retires after 39 years of service

by Stephanie Berryhill

Those who know Rev. Thomas Long III would agree that he is — in many ways — a legacy of sorts.

He is legacy to a family name, church, and ministry — a 39-year ministry from which he retired June 11.

Historically, Long's home church — Salt Creek United Methodist Church — has produced many ministers. His father and grandfather were ministers. As they both pastored Salt Creek, Long did also. He credits his predecessors, the church teachings, and members as having an influence on his decision to enter the ministry. Although holding close ties to the church, Salt Creek members were not supportive of his decision to preach at what was considered an early age — 29.

Long

"When I came in [the ministry] — if you were young — the older ones would kind of look down on you."

Around the era Long received his license to preach, the support of Methodist church elders was vital. Long received his license in 1954 — when Salt Creek was hosting the annual conference. Long credits Thlophlocco church member Emma Scott for seeing promise in his future as a minister. "At first, Salt Creek turned me down. She's the one that spoke up for me and that's how I got my license to preach. So I've done my best not to fail her — with that in mind I've served 39 years. She was a lovely woman; I always appreciated her."

Long attended Cooks Christian Training School in Phoenix, Ariz. His first appointment was to the Honey Creek Circuit.

He had hopes of serving his first appointment at his home church, however he was forewarned.

"They say you shouldn't accept [your first] appointment at your home church because they know you like a book." He eventually served one of his longest pastorates at Salt Creek. "They put up with me for six years," he joked.

Long credits retired Springfield minister Turner Tiger for offering support and advice. "The funniest thing happened at Springfield — they didn't have a clock, so I asked him (Tiger) 'what time do I quit?' and he said 'you see that shade pass that porch — that's time to quit.'"

Among some of his other church appointments were: Mutteloke; Claremore; a Wichita, Kan. church; Newtown; and Pickett Chapel. Long also served as superintendent of the Oklahoma Indian Missionary Conference West and Northeast districts. As Long oversaw the churches of both districts, he realized there were distinctions between different Indian cultures. Long noted that Western Oklahoma Indians cling to traditional social activities such as pow wows — thus resulting in closed church doors during the summertime. "You just don't preach against their beliefs — you go with them so far, but eventually later on in life they [realize the error of their ways]."

Long contends there is less participation and discipline in the church today. He attributes the lack of church attendance to a younger generation that has had to leave rural areas in order to find jobs. "Once they move off to the city they never come back." Certain services have become shorter in length, some are barely thriving to continue. Long remembers when churches routinely held a fasting day before each fourth Sunday. The fasts included prayer, the denial of food, and a testimonial service. It was one way to obtain more faith in God and overcome worldly things, he said. "Some of [the churches] still try, but it's usually just the organizations — the United Methodist Women. It's usually the women that try to keep it going."

All night services consisting of singing, preaching, and testimony were also a source of spiritual strength.

Predominantly English hymns are sung in some Mvskoke churches now. "They weren't singing too much

A young Rev. Long in the pulpit of Honey Creek church with daughter, Karen.

English songs when I first came [into the ministry], but we don't have too many Creek singers anymore."

Coming full circle, Long's last appointment was to the Honey Creek Circuit. Upon retiring he placed his name on Honey Creek church's membership role. Long said his decision to join the church was strongly influenced by the memory of a Honey Creek church member who passed earlier this year — the late Mattie Long, his wife of 43 years.

Afflicted with heart disease shortly after her death, Long said his illness is not the reason for his retirement. He and his wife had planned his retirement previously, he said. "I never thought it would be like this."

Long said he has been sustained by his faith and the prayers of family and friends. "People kept calling and asking about me and how I was — it's great to know I had people's support. Without their help, I don't know what would have happened."

Baptists conclude 118th annual associational meeting

YARDEKA — The 118th Annual Muscogee-Seminole-Wichita Indian Baptist Association Annual Meeting concluded with the election of officers and a change in management of the assembly grounds.

The theme for the annual meeting was "Hope for Hurting Humanity", taken from the New Testament book of Acts, said Alan Colbert, MSW association director of missions.

Colbert said the main item of business was transferring the assembly grounds management to an executive committee and a business manager.

"We want the grounds to be self-supporting," Colbert said. "It will still be under the control of the MSW association, but the decision making for use of the grounds will be left to the committee."

A five-member committee has yet to be selected.

The annual sermon was delivered by Mike McConnell, Vian Creek Baptist Church. The mission challenge was given by Colbert and the closing message was preached by Bill Barnett, Indian Nations Baptist Church.

Colbert said one of the most inspiring messages was given by George Jesse, Spring Baptist Church, on the role of the church in the world. Colbert said Jesse stressed the importance of the church to return to the strong faith, endurance, and prayer life that characterized early Indian Christians.

The first associational hall of fame award, in honor of any person, or couple, who through the association, has helped establish or supported church work was presented. It was given posthumously to John McIntosh, the first missionary to the Wichita Indians. McIntosh, 1833-1906, met the Wichitas in 1874. The award will be kept at Big Arbor Baptist Church where McIntosh was a member.

Associational officers for 1993-94 and their home churches are:

- Willis Knight, moderator, Little Cussetah;
- Geneva Colbert, clerk, Tuskegee;
- Ernest Marshall, treasurer, Montesoma;
- George Jesse, pastoral ministries, Spring;
- Dan Culley, Sunday school director, Spring;
- Byar Beaver, discipleship training, Okfuskee;

- Millie Colbert, music ministry, Weogufkee;

- Naomi Bear, women's missionary union director, Tookparfka;

- Brenda King, family care ministry, Montesoma;
- Sam Jones, newsletter publisher, Gracemont Mission;
- Rose Knight, prayer coordinator, Little Cussetah; and
- Angela Fish, youth director, Sand Creek.

Eleven churches were represented with 63 messengers present.

Association dates: Oct. 16, second annual training conference, 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Rock Springs Baptist Church, Anadarko. Emphasis on outreach through church organizations.

Nov. 20, MSW executive board meeting, 9 a.m., Indian Nations Baptist Church, Seminole.

Tribal vision program focuses on program details

OKMULGEE — The Creek Nation offers a good eye care package to citizens, but sometimes it seems to come wrapped in a ribbon of red tape says the health director.

"We want these programs to help people, not frustrate them," said Edward F. Mouss, Director of the newly organized division of health administration.

"There has been some confusion recently about how to receive services from the Creek Nation Eye Clinic in Okemah and programs administered by community health representatives (CHR) programs," Mouss said. "We'd like to clear up some of the misunderstandings about what is available, and tell people how they can use the Creek Nation vision services with less hassle."

Mouss said what people perceive as red tape doesn't have to be a barrier that blocks them from services.

"This so-called red tape usually consists of the forms or procedures we have to follow to initiate and track program services," he said. "We can't entirely eliminate red tape from the system because we have to be accountable to our funding sources. Otherwise our programs won't continue to be funded."

Mouss said in the August issue of The Muscogee Nation News, readers were told about purchasing eyeglasses at reduced cost through the Okemah eye clinic, and about CHR vision programs. "But we didn't go far enough in instructing our citizens what they need to do before they show up for their appointment or how to apply for CHR vouchers."

All enrolled citizens are eligible for free eye exams at the Creek Nation Eye Clinic, which was opened as part of the Okemah Indian Health Clinic in December 1992. Appointments may be scheduled by phoning the clinic at (918) 623-1688, or by visiting the office, which is located across the street from the hospital, at 304 N. 14th Street in Okemah.

The most efficient way of making an appointment is to go by the eye clinic in person, and set up a chart at the same time Mouss said. Before the optometrist can see patients, a chart must be established at the Okemah Clinic.

To establish a chart, patients must provide their certificate degree of Indian blood card, Social Security card, second form of identification, and insurance information, if any.

"A chart has to be established at each Creek Nation Health facility used," Mouss said. "Even if you have been seen at the hospital emergency room or other Creek Nation or Indian Health Service facilities, a chart still has to be established at the Okemah Clinic before being seen at the eye clinic."

"If it is not possible to set your appointment in person, patients should arrive at the Okemah Clinic (located behind the hospital) at least an hour early, so that the medical records staff will have time to prepare a chart," Mouss said. The clinic provides a beneficial service to patients by ordering glasses and contacts at cost, direct from manufacturers. In turn, manufacturers require payment in advance by money order, cashier's check, or voucher.

The clinic optometrist does not receive a commission on the sale of these products. The tribe, however, does benefit when citizens spend CHR vouchers at the facility.

"It's simple arithmetic. When the cost is low, tribal dollars go further because we can buy more glasses and serve more people," Mouss said. "The CHRs administer two tribal vision programs which are funded by bingo revenues appropriated by the National Council."

One tribal program provides eye care for enrolled Creek school children. A second provides for other citizens (with elderly citizens receiving priority) who meet income and other eligibility guidelines. A third vision program for elder citizens administered by the CHRs is funded through a federal grant.

Before CHR vouchers for eyeglasses can be issued, the following must be met:

- file an application (available at the CHR Office at 1008 E. Eufaula Street, Okmulgee);
- the application must be reviewed and approved by the CHR manager ; and — funds must be available.

At the end of August, CHR eyeglass funds were still available for the elderly and for school children. Fiscal Year 1993 funds for eligible citizens between the ages of 18 and 49 have been exhausted. However, if reappropriated by the National Council, funds may be available after October 1.

Applicants must provide the following documentation to apply:

- CDIB card (children must have CDIB card in their own name)
- Social Security Card
- income verification for adult applicants (Social Security verification or recent payroll stub) Note: the children's program is exempt from income guidelines
- Tribal citizenship card (for children and elderly tribal programs)

Applicants must also:

- reside within Creek Nation boundaries;
- present statement from an optometrist that glasses are needed, or if glasses are already in use, provide the name and address of your optometrist;
- Children must be enrolled in school (grades K-12);
- Elderly applicants must be age 50 or older; and
- Applicants must not have received assistance from any other IHS optometry program within 12 months prior to the date of application.

It takes about two weeks to process the applications and issue vouchers. Applications are processed on a first-come, first-served basis.

"If you have questions about establishing a chart or applying for CHR eyeglass programs, contact the eye clinic or CHR office (918-756-8700, ext. 375). If you are unsure whether or not you have a chart established at the Okemah clinic, call the clinic medical records staff at (918) 623-1424, ext. 372.

Reclamation bureau expresses mission regarding Indian trust responsibilities

WASHINGTON — Bureau of Reclamation Commissioner Daniel P. Beard announced a new policy designed to protect Indian trust assets from adverse impacts of reclamation programs and activities.

"The Bureau of Reclamation has a shared responsibility in protecting the rights of Indian tribes," Beard said. "The new policy will help us to assess and mitigate potential impacts on Indian trust assets."

Indian trust assets are legal interest in property held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes. Such assets include lands, minerals, hunting and fishing rights, and water rights. The trust responsibilities require that all federal agencies take all actions reasonably necessary to protect trust assets.

nity they may ever have to own a home of their own," Childers said. "I commend everyone involved for their hard work and commitment to providing a better life for their fellow Creek citizens."

The 150 units represents a potential investment of $10 million in the eight-county area of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation. The majority of the housing will be developed through new construction, but some will be through the acquisition of existing homes currently on the market.

The housing authority currently administers 1,434 homes under the mutual help homeownership program as well as 328 rental units in four apartment communities.

If voters approve the proposed constitutional amendment in 1995, the number of representatives will be five each from Okmulgee and Tulsa, three each from McIntosh, Creek, Okfuskee, and Hughes, and two each from Muskogee and Wagoner-Rogers-Mays districts.

The bill was introduced by Bible. He cited the increasing costs of the Council and the concerns voiced by several citizens as the reason he introduced the bill. Representatives are paid $800 per month for their service, plus $75 for committee meetings and mileage.

In other business, concerns over the administration of the Johnson-O'Malley program were raised when the bill to allow the recontracting of the program from the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the Muskogee (Creek) Nation came before the Council. The Council voted to approve the recontracting by a 17-8 margin.

Okfuskee District rep. Mae Jackson said parents and program coordinators have told her the tribal JOM program allows only 60 cents per student, compared to $1 per student when the BIA operated the program.

Jackson also said JOM employees are working without fringe benefits.

Human development director Abe McIntosh, who has administrative responsibility for the program, admitted less money was allocated because the BIA allocated less money. Regarding fringe benefits, McIntosh said the public schools should be providing them since the JOM workers are school employees.

Ken Taryole, JOM program manager, said while there are more students enrolled, there is not any more money allocated for the program, thus creating the shortage of funds per-student.

The program served 8,515 students last year and it expects 9,000 or more this school year.

A close vote was recorded on a measure to exempt the BIA Branch of Credit program from the self-governance compact. Council Speaker Clarence Cloud, who is also president of the Muskogee County Indian Credit Association Board of Directors, urged the Council to exempt the credit program from self-governance in an Aug. 17 letter to representatives. The letter said the exemption would be in the best interest of Indians residing within tribal jurisdiction. The Council voted 14 to 10, with one abstention, to exempt the program.

The bill allows the BIA to continue to administer the credit and finance program. Under the self-governance compact, the tribe would have operated the program.

In other business, approval of an oil and gas pipeline right-of-way for $1,000 was granted to authorize the BIA to process the documents with Sonat Exploration Company over tribal land in McIntosh County.

The Council also approved a contract between the tribe and the City of Muskogee for the purchase of a sewer system for the bingo hall facility.

Rejected was a bill to add two committees to the National Council. The bill to add an internal affairs and a fact-finding committee was defeated.

Items approved include:

- a position statement on issues relating to the U.S. Department of Labor's proposed regulations for Job Training Partnership Act Indian programs, which request consultation before any regulations are enacted;
- modification of the elderly nutrition program budget;
- the confirmation of Rocky McIntosh as gaming commissioner; and
- confirmation of Kennan Wayne Phillips and Kenneth Moore, both to the tribal election board.

Message from Miss Muscogee (Creek) Nation

Over the course of the next year, my position will allow me to witness many events and I feel it is a great privilege to be able to pursue this goal. I would have never thought it possible without their support and I am thankful for the confidence that has been bestowed upon me and for the tremendous opportunity that now awaits.

I feel fortunate to still be able to take part in so many cultural events. I feel a deep reverence for our Muskogee culture and have supreme admiration for those that still practice our traditions. Time has not diminished our culture, nor identity as a people. An enormous debt of gratitude is owed to our elders who have fought to maintain our cultural identity and our heritage. I only hope that my generation can do as well.

— Marva Jackson, delivered Aug. 6.

Clarification

The August edition of The Muscogee Nation News reported that National Council representative Pat Kelly (Tulsa) had made statements favoring the parent policy legislation on the Head Start bill at the July Council session. However, Kelly said she was against the Head Start proposal and stated her views on why she opposed the legislation.

Second Chief Crow reports from national governors' conference

by Shelly Crow, second chief

TULSA — Colorado Gov. Roy Romer, chairman of the National Governor's Association, made it very clear that renewing citizen confidence in government is the only way to solve all of our problems, in his remarks at the National Governors' Association conference.

Vice President Albert Gore has been assigned by President Bill Clinton to the task of promoting the "reinventing of government" throughout the United States. In his address to the conference he discussed the need to decentralize federal government to the lowest common denominator.

He said the federal government employees are being asked how to change government so that it works for the people that it governs. It has been brought to the attention of the President that promotions in the federal government is by longevity, not by the quality of one's work. As a result, we have federal employees who survive in the system while basically providing no useful service or product.

Another problem is that those in government who are creative and strive for excellence are not adequately rewarded for their efforts. A system must be put in place that recognizes and rewards hard work for the betterment of our government.

As the vice president spoke to the governors, he pointed out their states had too long practiced the same concepts found in federal government. The governors pointed out a workshop is needed for mayors, city commissions, and county commissioners to share and present ideas to resolve government problems.

This is all well and good, except the need to include tribal governments was never addressed. Most state governors still do not recognize or understand the Indian nations and the need to consider tribal governments in the overall concept of "reinventing government."

John Motley, vice president for Federal Government Relations of the National Federation of Independent Businessmen, made a speech that emphasized the concern of small business owners concerning health care reform.

He said small businesses, numbering three million, represent 60 percent of all employers and on the average have four or fewer employees. Only one in five (20 percent) have or provide health care insurance. The majority of the nation's small businesses will be hardest hit by the health care reform package.

Small businesses are typically located in depressed areas employing 50 percent at the poverty level. Motley said these individuals are the ones that will be affected because they are the ones who will be laid off.

President Clinton followed Motley's speech. He discussed the following points:

— Americans should be allowed to choose our own physicians;

— promote universal health care. Right now the U.S. is spending $888 billion on health care per year and still approximately 40 million citizens are uninsured and receive health care only on an emergency basis. Health care delivered in this manner (on an emergency basis) is costing the American people a lot more in the long run;

— Managed health care is still necessary and represents the best method of accessing health care if the basic package is well developed and the price is right; and — less paperwork for everyone in health care.

The President spoke of a single parent woman who had four children — one terminally ill. She had to quit her $50,000-per-year job in order to receive health benefits from federal and state agencies. A good example of a system that is not working correctly.

A needed reform that was discussed was people with pre-existing medical conditions that are afraid to quit their current job for a better one due to loss of insurance coverage. This practice will stop under the President's health care reform package.

After the President spoke, the governors met and discussed the direction their states must take on health care.

Michigan Gov. John Engler said his state had asked the federal government for a waiver for all their health monies from the federal level. They want to control all Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Medicaid and be free to move monies into programs that will best serve their citizens's needs.

The Muscogee (Creek) Nation and all federally recognized tribes must realize that if the states are allowed to receive waivers for their programs, Indian citizens will be impacted. The population of Native Americans is included in the funding formula. These waivers remind me of self-governance in that we are all fighting with the Indian Health Service and the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The only governors that brought out minority issues were Joan Finney from Kansas and Ann Richards of Texas. Both are women.

Gov. Finney defended the tribes' right to have economic development in her state — whether it be gaming or any other industry. She stated that allowing economic development in her state by the Indian tribes was a win-win situation.

When Indian tribes are allowed to develop their own economic resources they become self-sufficient and can stay off of AFDC and other welfare programs.

Govs. Finney and Richards defended the superconducting supercollider project in Texas. Many minorities have received contracts on this project, including Indian tribes such as the Muscogee (Creek) Nation and the Mississippi Choctaws, and Black universities such as Langston.

That kind of cooperation among governmental entities will take mankind into the 21st century. A cooperative advancement in technology that no other country in the world can brag about.

I am very glad I attended this conference. I would like to have seen the governors of the various states represented at the conference sitting beside the chief of every tribe that has reservation status within their state boundaries all working together to serve all interests.

Issues such as reinventing government, health, education, and economic development could be a cooperative effort involving everyone, even the Native Americans who entertained the governors while they were in Oklahoma.

Minority owners for franchises sought

WASHINGTON — The Minority Business Development Agency (MBDA) of the U.S. Department of Commerce awarded $149,000 to Lisboa Associates, Inc. to perform promotion and outreach activities relating to the agency's national franchise initiative.

Lisboa is a minority-owned communications, management, and consulting firm in Washington, D.C.

The company will promote MBOA's initiative by developing and implementing outreach strategies, including promotional articles for publication in national newspapers and magazines and media manuals for use by MBOA's network of funded business assistance centers.

"The initiative is designed to promote, increase, and maximize minority ownership of franchises," said secretary Ronald H. Brown. "Through our outreach efforts, we are committed to informing the minority business community of all opportunities and options available for franchise ownership."

The minority community composes more than one-fifth of the American population, but owns only six percent of total businesses and an estimated three percent of franchised businesses. The MBDA conducts introductory franchise seminars nationwide to increase minority participation.

Muscogee Council Election '93

National Council election attracts 96 candidates for tribal primary

by Jim Wolfe

OKMULGEE — The 1993 tribal election season opened officially Sept. 20, with the filing of the first tribal Council candidates.

At the close of the filing period, Sept. 22, 95 tribal citizens had filed for the 36 seats on the Muscogee (Creek) National Council, the tribe's legislative body.

The 1994-95 National Council should be significantly different from earlier models. Nearly one-fourth of the seats (eight) will be filled with new representatives.

Five new seats — one each for the Hughes-Seminole, McIntosh, Muskogee, Okmulgee, and Tulsa Districts — have been added to reflect increasing tribal enrollment. The 36 total seats are up from the present 31 seats.

Three representatives, including the venerable speaker Clarence Cloud, did not seek re-election. Abdicating seats with Cloud, are Don Cahwee, Tulsa

District, and Alexander Thomas, Wagoner-Rogers-Mayes District.

Cloud, however, could leave a legacy with the Council: his son, David, is a candidate for his seat.

Four representatives are unopposed: Second Speaker Larry Bible, Tulsa District; Darrell Coachman, Hughes District; Tommy Newton, McIntosh District; and Bim Bruner, Tulsa District.

Bible himself is a legacy. His late father, Andy, served on the Council. Newton did not draw an opponent in the 1991 election either. Bruner was elected this spring to replace the seat vacated by Jerry Wilson, now the tribe's executive director.

Coachman's case is ironic. He did have a strong showing in his initial bid for Council two years ago, defeating an incumbent. The race for that district's seat (B) drew five opponents.

One reason given for the number of candidates is the compensation. Though

Tribe health care officials say reform nothing new; uncertain about Clinton plan

Creek Nation Health Care System

OKMULGEE — President Bill Clinton fired the starting gun for health care reform with the presentation of his health security plan, Sept. 21. In its wake, health care professionals are scrambling to assess what it will mean to the health care industry.

"At this point, we don't know for sure what reform will bring, other than it will surely bring change," said Principal Chief Bill Fife.

"All government programs, including Indian Health Service, will be effected, he said. "We will scrutinize the president's plan to make sure that health benefits now designated to Indians because of our unique status are preserved.

"Our health administrators are already working to meet health care reform head on. Our challenge is to be initiators of change, not casualties of change. Creeks have administered our own health program for 17 years. We're well positioned to move into the future with health care reform," Fife said.

Fife said Second Chief Shelly Crow, Creek Nation

Community Hospital administrator Florence July, and Creek Nation Health director Ed Mouss met with Hillary Rodham Clinton's special health care task force earlier this year, and will continue to be involved in the process.

"The Creek Nation has been active in the reform process since the beginning, and we will be active in the debate to come," Crow said. "After the president's speech, we immediately began to analyze our position."

Crow said Mouss briefed health administrators from the Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw, and Seminole nations at a meeting hosted by the Creek Nation in September.

"We believe the Five Tribes need to present a united front to deal with reform," she said.

"We are also taking a look at some of the model health care systems which influenced the president's plan, such as those now being tried in Hawaii, Vermont, and Rochester, New York," Mouss said.

Mouss said reform will impact the Creek Nation in three ways: as health care providers, as employers, and as consumers.

"The president introduced a guaranteed national benefit package and an outline for administering a national health care plan. Our first step in dealing with reform is to assess what services we now provide, and compare them to what the president proposes.

"Our Indian patients who use IHS as their sole or primary health care provider will find that they already have access to most of the basic services outlined by the plan through Creek Nation health care facilities.

"In some areas, vision and dental care for instance, we already provide more than the [proposed] plan dictates. We want to be able to continue to provide these benefits.

"What we don't know yet is how we will pick up the slack on the services we do not offer now, such as hospice, prosthetics, expanded emergency ambulance services, and extended home health care. That will come to light as the debate continues.

"In addition, people using our system will undoubtedly increase. As providers we will have to meet the demand for not enough to be the sole source of income to feed a family, it's some nice change for something that's considered a part-time job, albeit with full-time demands.

In December 1992, the Council changed the way representatives are paid. Before that, representatives were paid for their attendance at meetings, reimbursed for mileage and phone expenses. After the passage of NCA 92-193, the Council went to monthly payments.

Council members now receive $800 a month — $9,600 yearly. They are reimbursed expenses for travel while conducting Council business at the federal and tribal rate of 25 cents a mile.

With minimum reimbursements for mileage and the monthly salary, a representative could easily receive more than $10,000 per year.

Interestingly enough, the salary increase was intended to attract more candidates.

Section 101.F of the bill reads:

"An increase in the compensation for members of the National Council would encourage an increase in participation by tribal citizen(s) on serving in tribal leadership roles [sic]."

Of course, the mid-term Council election has attracted candidates with specific agendas. Since representatives are elected every two years to the Principal Chief's four years, election results can be a portend of conflict between the legislative and executive branches as former Chief Claude Cox learned in the two years following the 1989 elections.

Need proof? Compare the number of vetos between the 1989-91 Council with the number of vetos during the 1992-93 session.

For whatever reason, the sheer number of candidates and the tribe's present political climate make this an election well worth the participation of both the politician and the politicked.

Editor's note

The 1993 Muscogee (Creek) National Council Primary Election has already had an affect on some of us, though not a single vote has been cast.

For certain, the lives of the 96 candidates friends, relatives, and opponents will be anything but routine over the course of the election season.

Eventually, all of us will be affected by the 1993 elections.

A more immediate example however, is the October edition of The Muscogee Nation News. The sheer number of candidates — the most since the 19th century when there were two legislative houses — has limited the space of the publication severely.

To be certain, there are other restraints. Mailing of this special election issue was moved up to coincide with the mailing of the absentee ballots. Ninety-five questionnaires accompanied by 95 photos left precious little room for many of the regular features. Several pages are missing this month, including: letters to the editor; society; education; religion; and obituaries.

Appearing in this edition however, are stories regarding President Clinton's proposed health care reform plan (from the tribal health systems perspective) and the fiscal year 1994 comprehensive budget. Notices are listed in very brief form.

The MNN will return to its regular format next month. We regret the inconvenience.

Muscogee Council Election '93 Ballot instructions

As reported in the August edition of The Muscogee Nation News, this election marks the first time the tribe will use automated voting machines. This should speed up the voting tabulations and reduce greatly the opportunity for fraud.

At left, is a sample ballot. The candidates for each district seat will not have their names in the same place on every ballot.

For example, Earl Wheeler's name appears at the top of the list. The next ballot will have his name in another position. Each candidate will have his or her name rotated at both the top and bottom and in between the list of other candidates.

To vote:

- draw a line connecting the head and tail of the arrow that points to the candidate of your choice;
- use only the special pen or pencil provided;
- if you make an error, return the ballot to the precinct officials and request a new ballot; and
- do not fold ballots.

These instructions will also appear in Mvskoke.

Muscogee Council Election '93 special section

The following 16-page section identifies every candidate seeking a seat on the Muscogee (Creek) National Council. It is designed to introduce the candidates to our readers and not as any political analysis.

All candidates were asked to have their picture taken by The Muscogee Nation News or submit a photograph for publication.

The MNN also asked candidates to list biographical information, professional experiences, and a give a brief reason for wanting to be a Council representative.

Each candidate was asked to limit his or her reasons to 100 words. A limit was necessary to ensure fairness. The number 100 was necessary because of The MNN's space limitations.

Each candidate was given the same opportunity to respond. Candidates are listed in alphabetical order by districts. Submissions were edited for clarity, consistency, and style.

The Muscogee Nation News endorses no one candidate for any office.

The primary election is Oct. 23.

Clan: Beaver
Church: First Christian

Ground and-or tribal town: Koweta
Political, professional experience:

coordinator, Johnson O'Malley, Bristow Public Schools; secretary, Bristow Indian Community; summer youth director, BIC

Reason for seeking office: During my involvement with the Creek people it has become apparent the people have a great need to be represented. I have the desire to be the voice who will bring back the information to our communities. I feel with the size of the tribal budget, the legislative branch must be involved as the overseer of this budget. We must ensure the Creek citizens our tribal money is accounted. We cannot afford to neglect the funding for our services that benefit the people. I will work directly for the people and provide the leadership and direction necessary to accomplish many of the objectives required for a responsible tribal government.

Creek District Seat A

Name: Delbert Dunn

Parents: Ralph and Martha Dunn
Clan: Bear
Ground and-or tribal town: Kellyville-Polecat

Political, professional experience: Creek District representative, 1979-87

Reason for seeking office: Having once served as a Creek District representative, I believe I am qualified to serve as your representative again. It will be a privilege to serve as one of your representatives if elected. Your vote for me will be greatly appreciated.

Creek District Seat A

Name: Curtis Simmers
Age: 61
Residence: Bristow
Family: wife, Mary Louise
Clan: Wind
Church: United Methodist
Ground and-or tribal town: Arbeka, Concharty
Political, professional experience:

advisory council (pre-1979 Constitution), Concharty representative; helped bring improved Creek housing through the Newtown United Methodist Church sponsorship of low rent housing units at Creek Village — one of the first housing programs for Creeks under Housing and Urban Development; retired member, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Reason for seeking office: I will be more responsive to the tribal members of Creek District. I will work with our Creek County representatives for better communications with all three of our communities: Sapulpa; Kellyville; and Bristow. I will work with the Council to solve problems that affect our tribal members, especially elders — our top priority recipients for all services. I believe this is in our Indian tradition to respect and help our elders.

Creek District Seat A

Name: Earl Wheeler, incumbent
Residence: Bristow
Family: children, Kim Stewart, Kevin, Jeremiah, and Madison
Parents: grandfather, Wysena Madison Bucktro; grandmother, Da Ke Sah Co Conthaney Annie Brown Church: Mutteloke

Ground and-or tribal town: Sand Creek
Political, professional experience: JOM, 6 yrs; Title IV, 6 yrs.; chair, Bristow Indian Community, 4 yrs.; social services-cultural preservation committee, 4 yrs.; U.S. Air Force, 4 yrs.; Vietnam veteran Reason for seeking office: The Muscogee (Creek) Nation is at a critical stage in government. As an experienced Council member, I can and do play a vital role in utilizing tribal funds to improve tribal programs and services. As a representative I've sponsored bills for: health and emergency medical care; dental care; air conditioners for elderly shut-ins; education; home repair; elderly nutrition; and cultural preservation. We are at a turning with this administration as the tribe begins self-governance. The need for a trained and qualified Indian work force will be great. It is of the utmost importance to maintain experienced leadership for the growth of our great nation and for the people.

Family: children, Juanita, Anita, Noel, and Pete; daughter-in-law, Vickie Jack; grandchildren, Christina McDaniel and Nathan Jack
Parents: Helen Harjo Jimboy
Clan: Wind
Church: Creek Chapel
Ground and-or tribal town: Tal-muchasi

Reason for seeking office: We have all heard, 'I want to be the voice and the vote of the people.' I would like to carry that promise out on the National Council. With the growth of the Creek Nation, the voice of the people should be relayed by your representative. I have been chair of the Sapulpa Indian Community for six years. The biggest gripe is that the representatives do not attend community meetings. How can the constituents voice their vote if there is not a representative present to hear the voices of the people? Community meetings are as important as the National Council meetings. The representative needs to work to retrieve the powers that the Muscogee (Creek) Nation constitution vested in them — 'all legislative powers.'

Creek District Seat C

Name: David Cloud
Age: 48
Residence: Bristow
Family: wife, Patricia; sons, Rodney and Clinton Parents: Clarence and Louella Cloud
Church: Assembly of God
Reason for seeking office: To carry on the work that my father has started on the National Council. With his guidance, I believe I could serve the people of the Creek District in the same manner.

Creek District Seat C

Name: Soloman Hill
Age: 33
Residence: Bristow
Family: wife, Kimberly; five children
Parents: Jo Ann and the late George Hill
Clan: Beaver
Church: Buckeye
Ground and-or tribal town: New Tulsa
Political, professional experience: graduate, Depew High School; chair, Title IV and JOM, Depew Public Schools
Reason for seeking office: I am seeking the office to provide the Creeks and Yuchis in the Creek District with better representation on the National Council. I believe the present representatives do not inform the people of their monthly meetings. If elected I will support education, health, and cultural programs and work for the best interests of the Creek Nation.

Creek District Seat C

Name: Terry Lunsford
Age: 36
Residence: Bristow
Parents: Bernice Watson, Curtis Lunsford
Political, professional experience: Muscogee (Creek) Nation Environmental Services Administration, 6 yrs.; community health representative, 2 yrs.

Reason for seeking office: As a National Council representative I feel we should listen and speak for our people and I intend to do just that. As an eight-year employee for the Muscogee Nation I have represented the Creek Nation, in a sense, and I've heard the people voice their opinions, both positive and negative. If elected, I will go back to the communities, and allow the constituents a chance to become aware of the Council's plan of action. Many people feel they have little or no representation. I have approached several Council representatives with different requests from the people. However, these requests seem to have fallen on deaf ears. If I am elected the people will be heard.

Creek District Seat C

Name: Phyllis Bruner Warrington
Age: 44
Residence: Sapulpa
Family: daughter, Dode Barnett; son, Bruce; grandson, Japeth Tim Barnett Parents: the late George and Lizzie Harjo Bruner
Clan: Bird
Church: Salt Creek United Methodist
Ground and-or tribal town: Tuckabatchee

Political, professional experience: past member, officer, Title IV - now Title V - parent committee Indian education and JOM, late 1970s to 1991; past member, Sapulpa United Head Start Parent Policy Board; past member, Title VII school desegregation, Sapulpa Public Schools; past member, chair, tribal election board; member, secretary-treasurer, Sapulpa Indian Community Reason for seeking office: I will listen and take seriously the needs or problems of the Creek District citizens. I will attempt to take immediate action to help solve their needs to problems. I will support legislation for economic development, education, health care, preventive health care, sovereignty through legal action, and preserving our Mvskoke culture. Most importantly, I will make every effort to represent all Creek District citizens in their best interests.

Creek District Seat D

Name: Mose Cahwee, incumbent
Age: 75
Residence: Sapulpa
Family: wife, Thelma Clan: Deer
Church: Pickett Chapel
Ground and-or tribal town: Kellyville
Political, professional experience: member, education and community services committees

Reason for seeking office: I see great needs in education, community services, senior citizens, Head Start, and JOM programs, as well as cultural preservation and promotion. There is also a need for working class, middle-aged people. There are no benefits, provisions, or retraining programs for them if they are laid off from their jobs. I also want to see a food distribution program for Creeks and Yuchis living in a city with 10,000 or more population. I see a need to increase the school clothing allowance. What can you buy for $50? We need to emphasize health care and more benefits for Creek and Yuchi people. I also urge more citizen participation at community and Council meetings.

Creek District Seat D

Name: Duke Harjo
Residence: Sapulpa

administration, 6 yrs.; governing committee, Alabama-Quassarte Tribal Town, 5 yrs.; present chief, Alabama-Quassarte Tribal Town Reason for seeking office: As your representative I will commit myself to your services. Your priorities are my priorities. I will be a strong and informed voice for the people I serve. Your wants and needs will be taken to the National Council and they will be addressed. All information gained through Council meetings or with the various program directors and managers will be given to the people. More importantly, all information will be current, complete, and accurate. I will make you proud you elected me.

Hughes-Seminole District Seat A

Name: Cora Ann Beaver
Age: 59
Residence: Holdenville
Family: daughter, Vicky Zack
Parents: Nancy Harjo and the late John Beaver Sr.
Church: Salt Creek United Methodist
Ground and-or tribal town: Tuckabatchee

executive board secretary, Holdenville Indian Community; board member, Denver Native American Center; board member, Denver Indian Health Clinic; executive secretary, Denver Public Schools; American Indian Advisory Council; medical secretary, Colorado University, 17 yrs.; currently, secretary, Camp Oil Co.

Reason for seeking office: With my experience working with Indians — seeing the many problems of our Creek world — I feel I can work toward fulfilling some of the goals set by Creek government. We must be a progressive government to meet the demands of the obstacles hindering economic growth, health care for children and elderly and now for an increasing number of single people. As times change we need to look to our youth, education, and the experience of our elders for better tomorrows. The sacrifices of today will be worth the efforts in a fruit that produces.

Hughes-Seminole District Seat A

Name: Johnson Buck
Age: 52
Address: Holdenville

Political, professional experience: I am the main medicine man of the Creek tribe; housing inspector, ESA; specification writer, ESA; an assistance director of the alcohol and drug center, Ada
Reason for seeking office: I have seen important bills defeated because of absent Council representatives. We cannot have this to be an effective government. I will always be there to represent you. I am in contact with our Creek people everyday as an inspector on houses, making emergency repair on their houses, or in making medicine for my people. I understand what their needs are and how it must be done and this will be accomplished by aggressive work on my part. Many Creeks know that I can work with all people and I will continue to do so on your behalf. I ask for your help so I may be able to help you and our future generation. Mvto.

Okmulgee District Seat B

Age: 49
Address: Mounds
Family: wife, Norma; son, William N.
Parents: the late Billy and Lucy Coker Hale
Clan: Wind
Church: Snake Creek
Ground and-or tribal town: New Tulsa, Fish Pond

Political, professional experience: part-time aide in the machine tool program, Tulsa Technology Center
Reason for seeking office: There is a need for better representation for the elderly, high school, and college bound students in the Okmulgee District. This audience has not been told what programs or services are available to them because of a lack of communication from the district representative. I believe it is essential the district representative attend the community meetings. As we approach the 21st century the Creek Nation needs to address and train our young people in the new fields of technology to meet the employment problem. Mvto.

Okmulgee District Seat B

Name: Eugenia Kelly
Age: 33
Residence: Okmulgee
Parents: Eugene and Rose Kelly
Clan: Deer
Church: Nondenominational
Ground and-or tribal town: Weogufkee

Political, professional experience: many offices from refreshment committee chair to university Indian student president; registered nurse, bachelor's degree, nursing Reason for seeking office: The administration is two years old — enough time to get their act together. However, what I see is a chaotic government, almost like that in Russia. I am seeking office, not just standing by and voting. I want to help navigate change. As a voter, I'm disappointed by the people I helped to office. The elderly and youth are my top priority, followed by education. Beginning the fiscal year, these groups have monies budgeted, then by spring they're broke. This must stop. Children are the tribe's future and the elderly are the tribe's past. I'm a caring person. Often, I offer free professional service to citizens. I'm not employed by the tribe. I believe the administration sees to it I will not be there to help my people. Now, I work toward the future. Mvto.

Reason for seeking office: I am seeking re-election to the Muscogee (Creek) National Council because of my concern for the people. I was elected in December, 1992 to my present position. I feel I have gained the experience to continue making decisions that are of sound judgement. I have seen the need to assist individuals and have assisted them in the area of health, education, and social services. A Council representative needs to be open-minded to opinions from constituents and I feel I have done this and will continue to do so.

Parents: Walter and the late Mary Yahola Jones
Clan: Reccoon
Church: Montesoma
Ground and-or tribal town: Nuyaka

Reason for seeking office: I have identified five areas I believe should be addressed as a National Council representative. Those are: senior citizens; education; Council responsibilities; the family; and the future. More should be done for our senior citizens. We should invest more in education for our youth and Council members need to be accountable to the people they represent. On the family issue, I have been blessed to come from a strong Creek family background that spoke the Creek language and to have respect for our elders. As for the future, we need to be working together and I am willing to be a part of that team.

I believe the people of the Creek Nation play an important part of our future. The elderly as well as our young should be heard and I am willing to listen. I will always be available to the people. Council approves portion of comprehensive budget

More time needed to review $85 million budget

by Noah Long

OKMULGEE — Growth of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation is evident with a record $85 million comprehensive budget for fiscal year 1994, which began Oct. 1.

However, the growth — and a late budget — has caused the National Council to approve funding for only one-sixth of the total budget as they conclude hearings from tribal programs.

The council made the decision during its regular monthly session on Sept. 25.

McIntosh Oistrict rep. Tommy Newton, business and governmental operations committee chair, said a delay in receiving the budget made it necessary for the resolution to fund one-sixth of the funds.

"The committee was not allowed sufficient time for a thorough and complete review of the tribal comprehensive budget," Newton said.

The committee started budget hearings in late August. The community services and tribal affairs committees have completed their review process.

Pending final approval by the National Council, the proposed budget totals $85,058,366.

- executive branch, $291,890;
- treasury, $282,255;
- administration, $2.2 million;
- human development, $5.7 million;
- community services, $5 million;
- tribal affairs, $2 million;
- office of justice, $201,000;
- legislative branch, $670,000;
- judicial branch, $460,000;

- special appropriations, $394,000;
- independent agencies, $52 million; and
- health administration, $16 million.

Executive director Jerry Wilson cited four reasons for the $14 million increase.

"We added the Muskogee Bingo hall [operations] to the budget. With [the] self-governance act, we have more money. We had an increase in funding levels from various grant programs, and the health administration will [also] have an increase," Wilson said.

"Those are all good signs of a strong, and growing concern of the tribe," he said.

With a $9 million proposed increase in the independent agencies, it represents the largest budget item. However, the total amount takes into account the employment and associated costs of all tribal employees and $30 million for the bingo operations.

The independent agencies are boards, commissions, and authorities that receive direction and are accountable to the executive branch.

These include: the election board; citizenship board; lighthouse commission; gaming operations authority board; office of public gaming, tax commission, Creek Nation Foundation (funds are used to operate and maintain the elderly housing complex in Okmulgee); industrial development authority; Creek Nation construction; housing authority; farm authority; and agribusiness.

Gaming accounts for the largest component. The administration and operation expenses of the tribe's three bingo halls — Muskogee, Okmulgee, and Tulsa — totaled $30 million.

Other agencies accounting for the total include $19 million from the housing authority and $1.3 from the lighthouse administration.

The health administration is expected to receive a $4 million increase for the delivery of health care in FY '94. The figure includes the operations of the Creek Nation Community Hospital in Okemah, four health and dental clinics in Eufaula, Okemah, Okmulgee, and Sapulpa.

Principal Chief Bill Fife told the Council he expects a new health clinic to open in Okmulgee this fiscal year. It too is included in the budget.

Wilson said the Council acted wisely in funding one-sixth of the budget during the meeting.

"The budget indicates the Principal Chief, Council and administrators place education as a high priority," Wilson said.

The comprehensive budget will allocate around $6 million toward educational programs in FY '94.

The $85 million budget is believed to be one of the highest among businesses and industry in Okmulgee.

Four hundred tribal employees make Creek Nation the largest employer in Okmulgee County, according to available figures from the Okmulgee Chamber of Commerce.

"This budget shows the Muscogee Nation to be a progressive tribe," Wilson said. "The magnitude of the budget will have an impact on the tribe and with other governments and communities of which we are in partnership."

Council members have said they hope to complete their budget review process within 30 days.

The next regular session of the Council will be Oct. 30 at the tribal capitol complex in Okmulgee.

In the Matter of:

Candy Lynn Stanke (JV-86-7); deprived child under 18 years of age

The Muscogee (Creek) Nation to:

Oonald Arnett, putative father of Candy Lynn Stanke. You are hereby notified that termination hearing as to said child has been set in the above styled and numbered cause for 1:30 p.m. on the 15th day of November, 1993, before the Honorable Patrick E. Moore, Oistrict Judge, Muscogee (Creek) Nation, Okmulgee, Oklahoma at which time you are directed to appear on said date at said time.

Second Chief to lead drug awareness week; stresses education

by Shelly Crow, Second Chief

It is important the Muscogee (Creek) Nation work together to prevent the spread of drugs among our youth.

The Principal Chief has stated his 1994 focus is to strengthen our communities and families.

What better way than to establish our own Creek Nation Red Ribbon Week?

October 25 through 29 is Red Ribbon Week throughout Oklahoma. The office of the Principal Chief wants the Muscogee (Creek) Nation to be a leader in drug prevention with our children.

To kick off a drug awareness program within the Creek Nation, the tribe will be sponsoring a poster and essay contest for American Indian children. Categories will be developed and cash prizes will be awarded. Funds for this drug awareness event has been donated by the gaming operations authority board.

Watch for more details through your community centers, schools, and your Council representatives.

Education is another area that will strengthen our nation. Help your young children at home. The following are some ideas to assist your children in learning at home:

— install a love of learning. Read to your infant or young child, or read with an older child, every day. Show your child that you enjoy reading. Take your child to the library regularly. Turn off the television for a set period every day;

— motivate your child. Build self-esteem. Teach your child to think positively. Teach self-discipline. Teach your young child to concentrate on the task at hand. Compliment him or her on jobs well done. Reward your child often! Make learning enjoyable. Create a special place for working together or doing homework. Break up larger tasks; your child will enjoy learning more if the learning is broken up into manageable parts. For younger children, about 15 minutes of working together per day is enough. An older child can handle up to 30 minutes at a time. Help your child succeed. Don't compare your child to anyone else, not even their brothers or sisters. Be enthusiastic about the things he or she has learned to do independently. Encourage him or her to develop more self-help skills;

— know your child's learning style. Children learn in different ways. One way is not better than another. Your child's teacher can assist you in determining your child's learning style. Good luck in school this year.

These tips were taken from the National Parent Teacher Association.

health professionals and staff.

"We will have to explore ways to provide services that we do not now provide. Where will our health care professionals come from? Will we be able to provide them ourselves? Will we have to contract them out, or will we be contracted by other entities to provide health care? There are many questions to be considered."

As employers, the tribe must compare employee health insurance against the basic plan provisions. In addition, employers will be required to provide more than one option for health insurance. In most cases, Creek Nation employees now receive more than the basic plan requirements, Mouss said.

"One major difference under the president's plan is that insurance companies cannot deny coverage because of preexisting conditions, and there will be no probationary period before coverage begins," Mouss said.

If adopted, the president's plan would guarantee comprehensive health coverage for all Americans regardless of health or employment status, and all Americans will have more than one health care plan to choose from.

For example, under this proposed low cost-sharing plan, patients would be charged a $10 payment for outpatient services from plan providers. Patients choosing the higher cost-sharing plan could choose their own provider, but services would be charged the standard 20 percent coinsurance. As the plan is presently, Indians who choose to stay with IHS as their provider will not be charged copayments, Mouss said.

He said the proposed higher cost-sharing plan seems to be comparable to health insurance now provided by the Creek Nation health care system.

"At this point, no legislation has been drafted, so we are still in the talking stages. But one thing is certain: under the proposed plan all Creeks will become health care consumers, and we will be making a consumer's choice about who will provide our health care services," Mouss said.

Muscogee Council Election '93

Voters narrow field to 22; irregularities cited in Okfuskee race

OKMULGEE — Twenty-five of the 36 Muscogee (Creek) National Council seats have been filled as a result of the Oct. 23 primary.

Election officials described the turnout as moderate. The largest field of candidates (95) was expected to draw a larger turnout.

One Okfuskee District race was declared a draw after the count ended in a tie. Incumbent Judy Roberts and candidate Billy Williams each received 193 votes.

The election board decided to accept the petitions filed by Roberts and Williams at an Oct. 28 meeting. The matter now rests with tribal district court where both candidates have filed for an evidentiary hearing.

Roberts contends she is the winner after unofficial results gave her a slight edge in votes. When the actual ballot counting was finished in the early morning of Oct. 24, the race for Okfuskee District Seat D was declared a tie between her and Williams.

No date for a hearing had been set at press time.

Of the 24 incumbents seeking re-election:

- 10 were victorious;
- eight were defeated;
- five remain in run-offs; and
- one race is being contested.

Tribal administration reveals new master building plan for capitol complex reprinted from Okmulgee Daily Times

OKMULGEE — Visions of the future, while maintaining the culture and tradition of the past, are featured in the proposed master site plan for the Muscogee (Creek) Nation Tribal Capital Complex.

Principal Chief Bill Fife is revealing the proposed plan to introduce tribal officials, citizens, and the general public, to the proposed site plan.

"We have updated the master plan utilizing the 70 acres we have at the present time at the complex site," Fife said. "We have been in discussion with Council members, staff, and architects in developing the master plan."

Fife said the plan was based on the future population growth and demand for governmental services and personnel. New construction will cost approximately $6 million. When the entire project is complete, it will have an estimated value around $11 million," Fife said.

"This is considered to be part of the economic development program of the tribe and for the surrounding communities," he said. "Major construction activity creates jobs, generates revenue for goods and services, thus [it] impacts the local economy from an economic standpoint."

"You can expect to see major changes at the complex in two or three years. We want to make this a showplace for our citizens and the general public. We want to make the Muscogee people and our community friends proud of the Muscogee Nation government."

In an attempt to display the front portion of the tribal complex as the official capital of the tribe, the long range plan depicts separate buildings for the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of government. Included in this section of the master plan are governmental centers to house the independent executive agencies, the office of treasury, and the department of justice.

The tribal independent agencies (mound) building is being renamed "The Capitol Mound Building." The master plan also provides for a memorial area in the northwest section which will accommodate the "National Stickball Field."

Plans in the memorial area indicate a "message center" to be erected also. An electronic message board is to display tribal community announcements which is to be legible from U.S. Highway 75.

In the center of the site plan are buildings for program, health, and realty services. A $700,000 grant has been approved for the construction of a multi-purpose facility. It will house education, elderly nutrition, library, and wellness program services. The building is expected to be at the final construction phase by summer 1994.

"We want to create a working service environment that will be conducive to serving our citizens. With this plan there is a logical order in which service agencies are made accessible to the people in one central location," Fife said.

The Creek Nation Housing Authority is also expected to receive funding to build an administrative, management, and special programs office.

"In the early 1970s the first preliminary plans were developed for the complex site. At that time all we had was a piece of land and we were just getting our tribal government reactivated," said tribal executive director Jerry Wilson. "The Creek Nation existed socially prior to the 1970s, but today and for years in the future, the Creek Nation

Tribe to receive Administration for Native Americans grant funds for manufacturing plant

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) Nation will receive a $143,990 grant from the Administration for Native Americans to fund an economic development project that could employ 10 to 15 people.

The tribe will use the money to develop a small manufacturing plant specializing in machine shop work, assembly line processes, and fabrication.

"This project will create jobs for tribal members," said Principal Chief Bill Fife. "It will also diversify the tribal economy and produce revenue."

The enterprise will be developed in three phases: incubation; technical training; and production.

"Through this process we will develop our work force, establish operating systems, [and] complete [the] planning process with the final product of an enterprise capable of competing in any market," said executive director Jerry Wilson.

Oklahoma State University-Okmulgee will play a key role in the project by providing training and research to begin the manufacturing plant. The Creek Nation Job Training Partnership Act Program will recruit trainees for the program. Extensive curriculum at OSU-Okmulgee will provide work force training.

"We are very excited about the potential that exists between the Muscogee (Creek) Nation and our institution to establish a small manufacturing enterprise," said OSU Okmulgee Provost Bob Klabenes.

With the ANA grant, the tribe has emulated over $1 million in grant awards this year, Wilson said. He also credited James King with developing the proposal concept.

Letters to the editor

Citizen thanks Council for support

Editor:

I went on a missionary trip with the Assembly of God Ambassadors in Mission Program in July. Our destination was Tyumen, Siberia. While in Tyumen our missionary team of 57 teenagers and adults held crusades in the city and ministered in a camp for children. Previously, the Russian government utilized this camp to indoctrinate the children to communism.

My trip to Russia was very rewarding and was a very humbling experience. I would like to thank the Creek National Council for their support — as we were responsible for trip funding. It is greatly appreciated.

Citizen establishes preservation association

Editor:

I am establishing the Muscogee Cultural Preservation Association to research, document, and preserve, the Muscogee culture, language, and history.

This association will also act as an educator by disseminating information to our own people and the general public in order to promote better understanding of the races.

The establishment of a tribal archive system to document and preserve Muscogee tribal life in the past, present, and future is also one of the goals of this association, and it will pursue funding to establish a Muscogee tribal resource center-museum to house these archives.

Virtually every aspect of the Muscogee culture will be researched and documented for preservation, such as: food; music and dance; sports, recreation; art and design; traditional dress; crafts; medicine; language, pre-removal history, etc. with the end result being the preservation of our culture through contemporary methods such as video, audio, and computers — all produced by Muscogee people.

If there are any questions I can answer about my ideas, just let me know and I'd be glad to help.

Second Chief Crow supports drug education and awareness efforts

by Shelly Crow, Second Chief

Recently, the Muscogee (Creek) Nation concluded its Red Ribbon Week observance. This is the first time that the tribe took the initiative and had its own program for drug awareness in conjunction with state activities.

Hundreds of children in schools across the Creek Nation submitted artwork for the poster contest as well as wrote essays.

As a mother, nurse, and educator, I know firsthand the importance of creating awareness and then educating our youth to the dangers and consequences of drug abuse and misuse.

That so many children (and their parents and guardians) got involved with this Red Ribbon Week project, gives cause for hope that they can enjoy their childhood without the devastation caused directly and indirectly by drugs...

November promises to be another busy month.

In addition to the regular routine and not so routine functions of the Second Chief's office, November 11 is Veterans Day.

Aside from all tribal offices being closed in observance of the Muscogee veterans who have served America and the Creek Nation in the armed forces, I am expressing my personal gratitude for those veterans who answered the call for warriors regardless of where the battle was being fought.

I am especially proud of those Indian women who also served their country and their tribe with honor and dignity and want to remember them also...

Finally, November is the month of Thanksgiving.

Though this year has been difficult at times, I still have much to be thankful for.

It is my hope that you too, have much to be thankful for at this time of year. Let us remember the spirit of Thanksgiving and especially remember those less fortunate.

Influenza is a viral infection of the nose, throat, bronchial tubes, and lungs. Health officials emphasize immunization for the elderly and those with health problems which might become deadly with a flu infection.

"The viruses that cause flu frequently change, so people who have been infected or given a flu shot in the past may become infected with a new strain. Because of this, and because any immunity produced by the flu shot will possibly decrease in the year following vaccination, persons in the high-risk groups should be vaccinated every year," said division of health administration chief medical officer Cynthia M. Berry, D.O.

"This year's flu shot contains viruses representing the A/Texas, A/Beijing, and B/Panama strains, which are thought to be most likely to occur in the United States this winter," Berry said.

A single flu shot is needed each season for persons age nine or older; younger children may need a second shot after a month.

Berry said individuals in a high risk group and should get a flu shot if they:

- are 65 or older;
- have long-term heart or lung problems;
- have been treated recently for kidney disease, cystic fibrosis, chronic metabolic disease, or severe asthma;
- have a type of cancer or immunological disorder;
- are ages 6 months through 18 and are on long-term treatment with aspirin;
- are employed in a health care facility, nursing home, or provide care to high-risk persons either at home or in a facility.

Immunization is not for everyone, Berry said. Individuals should consult a doctor before taking the vaccine if they:

- are allergic to eggs;
- had a serious reaction to previous flu shots;
- have ever been paralyzed with Guillian-Barre syndrome;
- may be pregnant; or
- are ill and have fever.

Housing authority to begin comprehensive rehabilitation grant program on older homes

OKMULGEE — The Creek Nation Housing Authority has begun its rehabilitation grant program, said Joe Jackson, housing authority executive director.

"The program has begun work in several areas including 504 handicapped accessibility projects," Jackson said. "Those homes that are the oldest by project are scheduled for the first and second years. If a home was assessed and included in the plan, the homeowner will be contacted by us when their project comes due."

The grant program gives the housing authority the opportunity to correct problems in earlier constructed homes that have been identified for some time, Jackson said.

Jackson said the most important requirement for eligibility in the program is for homebuyers to be current with house payments.

"Those homebuyers with delinquent balances have been contacted to set up a payment plan so the work on their homes can be started as scheduled," Jackson said. "If a homebuyer is delinquent, we want them to contact us now to clarify the matter.

"We do not want to pass over anyone when it comes time for work to begin on their homes."

Jackson said home maintenance and payments are the sole responsibility of the homeowner and the program is being administered by the housing authority.

"We want to stress that this is a housing authority program and not funded by the tribe," Jackson said. "If there are questions or concerns, people should contact the housing authority comprehensive grant office."

"The assistance from the tribe we received in the initial application process is appreciated. Without their assistance we would have been hard-pressed to even be considered for funding," Jackson said. He also recognized the housing authority board of commissioners for leadership and direction.

"We are moving ahead and making progress."

Newtown couple observes 59th anniversary

OKMULGEE — Although Roosevelt Oerisaw has been married over one-half of a century, he still remembers the little pigtailed, red-headed girl who used to run around the grounds of Newtown Church.

Both Roosevelt and Cora Bell Deerisaw have changed over the past 70 years, but it is their ability to work together that has kept their union solid for the past 59 years.

"It's just like a [horse] team you know. If one pulls [its] load and the other pulls [its] load — they work together. You have to keep pushing and keep pushing — one horse keeps up with the other horse."

A former member of Tallahassee Methodist Church, young Roosevelt would often visit Newtown Methodist Church with his family, thus he and lifelong Newtown member Cora grew up knowing each other. After a year of courting, Roosevelt casually mentioned that he'd like to marry. "He said he wanted to get married, so I told him to ask my mother. But I think it's more like he talked her into it," Cora laughs. The couple were wed by Rev. Martin Checote in his home, east of Okmulgee, on Oct. 26, 1934.

Although the Okmulgee couple never had children, they have "raised enough kids to call them our own," Roosevelt said. The Deerisaws believe the high incidence of divorce is largely because of a lack of perseverance among couples.

"Seems like young people have a disagreement and don't want to work it through," she said. "You (men) got to learn how to pull your part; she's got to learn how to pull her part and that's how you stay together, see. You got to learn to understand each other," he said.

Council member discusses travel expenses

Editor:

[In September] I went on a seminar for the first time since I became a National Council representative. I never really knew how much of our citizens' money was being spent on these trips. The seminar I attended was on Code of Ethics for Tribal Government. This code of ethics is really something our tribe needs, but we need it in all areas of our Creek Nation boundaries. I have always wondered why we spend so much money to fly all over the United States when we could bring the seminar to Okmulgee and include our community Indians.

With this in mind, I would like to report how much money was spent on me:

- air fare — $466;
- lodging — $129.60;
- seminar fees — $375, and
- mileage to and from the airport.

With this in mind, consider that there were eight of us in our class so the amount would be times eight. Also, while we were there, there were three more Creek Nation employees arriving for another seminar across the hall.

The reason I am writing this letter is because I want to make a report on the money I used for this trip and to the Creek people to help us get a code of ethics in our tribe. This will help us to be dealt with fairly within our own tribal government.

Oh yes, with the money we spent going, we could have had an instructor come to Okmulgee and we could have included our community people (the trip was to Las Vegas).

Tribe begins 4-H pilot livestock project

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) Nation has implemented a 4-H program for Indian youth between ages nine and 19 who live within the Creek Nation boundaries.

The emphasis of this program is to encourage young people to enroll and participate in the 4-H activities within their county, said Robin Cooper, tribal 4-H agent.

As a part of the tribal program, the Creek Nation 4-H Advisory Committee accepted applications from young people throughout the Creek Nation to assist with funding for swine projects. The program is being funded with a grant from Conoco Oil Co. and matching funds appropriated by the Muscogee (Creek) National Council.

Projects were awarded to 17 4-H members from the Creek Nation. Those youth participating in the project are: B.J. Baker, Kellyville; Kristi Chambers, Oktaha; Louis Felix, Kellyville; Joyce Huitt, Porter; Lindsey Johnson, Oktaha; Jordan Lecher, Haskell; Christopher Mathews, Porter; Michael McCall, Glenpool; Robert McDougal, Kellyville; Dylan Rogers, Moss; Andrea Romero, Calvin; LaVieka Smith, Graham; Michelle Story, Moss; Joshua Stout, Glenpool; Cassandra Thompson, Schuler; and Brett Yocham, Kellyville.

The 4-H members will receive their pigs in November and raise them to show in livestock exhibits next spring.

After the show season, the participants are required to compensate the tribal program by breeding their gilt and returning a pig from the litter. In this way, the participants will learn responsibility to other 4-H members. It will also allow the committee to help other 4-H members the next year.

In addition to the swine project, there are other programs for Creek Nation 4-H members, Cooper said. Any prospective 4-H member living within the Creek Nation can contact Cooper at: (918) 756-8700, ext. 370 or write P.O. Box 580, Okmulgee, OK 74447.

Sheri Brokesoulder, of the Office of Public Gaming, presents a check to National Council Speaker Clarence Cloud for the Creek Nation 4-H swine project.

Holiday greeting from the Principal Chief

I want to remember all of our tribal members who are veterans of the armed forces, especially on Veterans Day. We must never forget that some have given their lives so that we might be free. Let us remember all of those who have answered that most high calling.

On behalf of me and my family, I want to wish each and everyone of you a wonderful Thanksgiving and I hope that the spirit of the holiday season is with all of you.

Sincerely,
Bill Fife, Principal Chief
Muscogee (Creek) Nation

Muscogee (Creek) Nation tribal offices will be closed:

- Nov. 11 for Veterans Day; and
- Nov. 25 and 26 for Thanksgiving.

Remember our veterans who have paid freedom's price for us all. Never forget those missing in action (MIA) and prisoners of war (POWs).

Administration proposes new master plan exists physically, economically, and governmentally," Wilson said.

The plan calls for each branch or service to be sectioned off in quarter parcels. The buildings will be constructed in a circular pattern with an opening facing east, following the traditional building pattern of the Muscogee people.

Facing north, will be the building housing the executive branch of government. The Solomon McCombs Executive Office Building will continue to be the main focus of the complex.

The legislative branch building will be juxtaposed east of the executive branch building. The judicial branch building will be erected south of the legislative branch structure. A garden plaza area will be constructed between the two buildings.

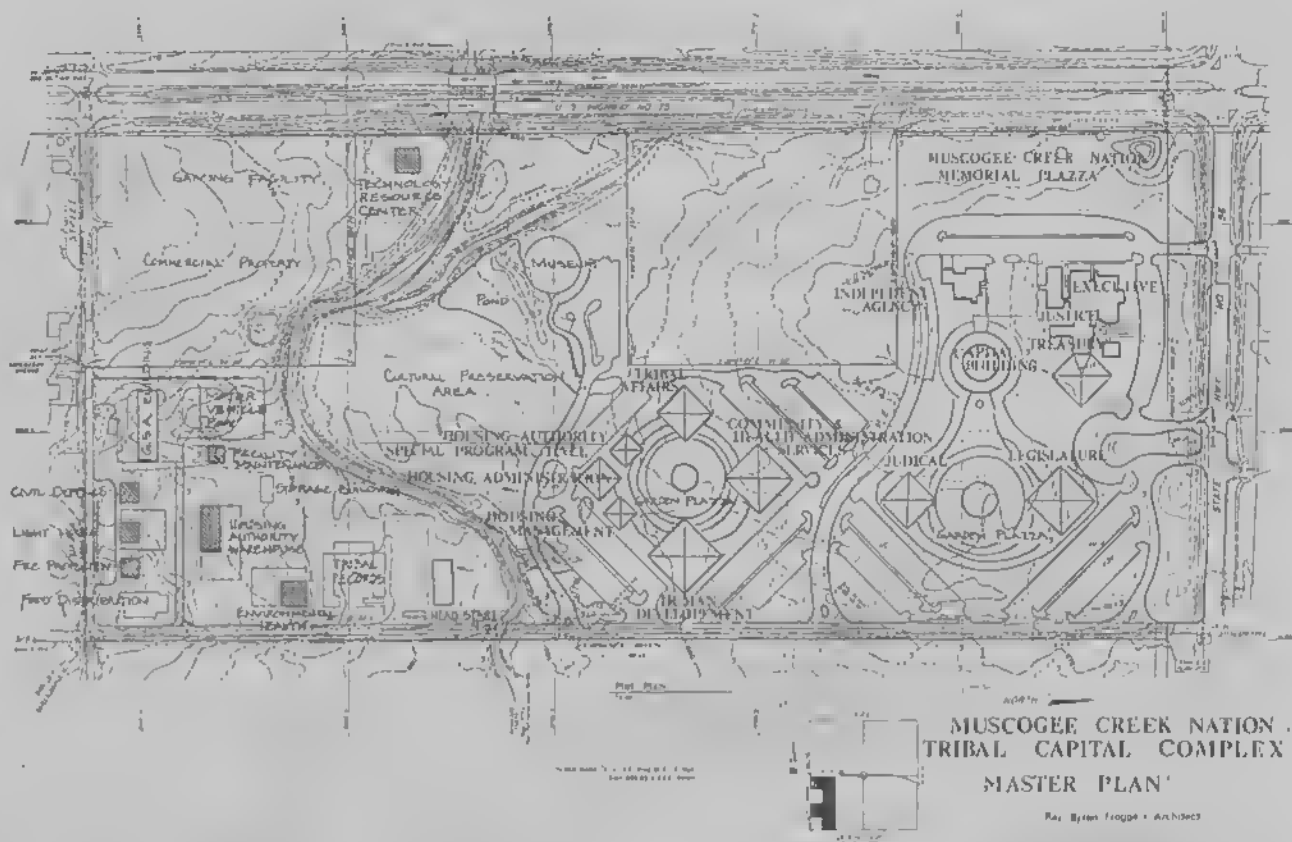

Approximately 10 acres is being reserved to continue accommodating Creek Nation Okmulgee Bingo.

Additionally, the tribe is planning on construction of a technology resource center to serve as a lab for the research and development of areas ranging from health to economic development. Developing the center along U.S. Highway 75 would make it accessible to fiber optic communication lines, once they are available in the area, said Wilson.

"We would like to include telecommunications capability in the technology resource center building," Wilson said.

Fife also indicated plans are being discussed to develop an industrial park separate from the capital complex, requiring an additional master plan.

Wilson said a bill pending in Congress could be a source of funding for the judicial branch and lighthouse administration facilities. Proposals are being developed to fund a community services division building; a funding plan is being packaged to finance other buildings included in the plan. Tribal and private funds will be sought to add beauty, arts, and memorial items to the site, Wilson said.

Council overrides veto, will reduce size in 1996

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) National Council voted to reduce its membership in the first meeting following the tribal primary election.

The Council voted to override Principal Chief Bill Fife's veto of NCA 93-123 at its Oct. 30 regular session.

Next year the number of Council representatives increases from 31 to 36 members.

In his veto message, Fife contended that the formula for calculating representation (one representative for each district and another per 1,100 citizens) could be interpreted to mean citizens within the district as well as within the Creek Nation.

Fife also contends that the "phrase 'with each district having a minimum of two representatives' destroys the concept of equal representation."

Despite those and other arguments, the Council voted 23 in favor and only one dissenting vote.

In other business, the Council:

- authorized the purchase of a truck and trailer for $33,400;

— appropriated $6,100 of bingo revenues to the Creek Nation 4-H swine project. The amount matches funds contributed by Conoco Oil Co.;

— appropriated $400 each to Howard Edmundson of Dewar and Barry Parkerson of Coweta toward expenses of their participation in the Indian National Finals Rodeo;

— authorized the pursuit of trust status for properties in Dustin and Twin Hills;

— authorized the purchase of 115 twin bed mattresses for the Eufaula Dormitory;

— appropriated funds for emergency home repairs;

— confirmed the appointment of George Thompson of Yardeka, to the Creek Nation Housing Authority Board; and — confirmed the appointments of Sandra Wilson of Eufaula, and Ramona Mason of Tulsa to the Eufaula Dormitory School Board.

The Council's next regular session is Nov. 20.

Principal Chief Fife reviews year, offers future plans in his holiday message

by Bill Fife, Principal Chief

There is no time more appropriate to express appreciation for tribal employees, the National Council, and citizens of the Muscogee (Creek) Nation than the holidays. The support each has offered my administration during fiscal year 1993 enables our nation to progress.

Consequently, progress requires growth. Economic growth is a crucial element for the success of our nation; it will enhance our living standards and knit together our diverse society. Moreover, growth requires good organization and commitment to our mission, goals, and objectives.

I have been encouraged this year. Our nation has recruited qualified and resourceful individuals, both Creek and Yuchi, who are dedicated to our people and to making our government work. In the past, our brightest minds left Creek Nation to seek employment. The tide is turning slowly and these people are returning to lend energy and excellence to our work force. Let's hope this is the beginning of a new trend.

This year, we have concentrated on education for job preparation in several new ways. We have required that summer youth employment program participants attend an intensive, week-long training program at Oklahoma State University-Okmulgee. The program introduces a variety of career programs, career testing, participation in job-related activities, and otherwise - prepares them for jobs before they report to work. Recently, we have provided education and training opportunities for employees to upgrade their skills or continue their education also. We have encouraged technical education as an alternative opportunity to train our people for rewarding work. I have put effort into creating a cooperative relationship between Creek Nation, local, state, and federal governments, while at the same time have been successful in exercising and maintaining our sovereign status.

Unfortunately, our largest project for business and industry, the Superconducting Super Collider Project, was rejected by Congress earlier this year. We are in the process of compiling a report of ex-

In all, 13 incumbents were successful in their re-election bids. Eleven were defeated. Four incumbents were unopposed and three did not seek re-election.

In the Okfuskee District contest for Seat D, which was declared a tie after the Oct. 23 primary, incumbent Wynema Roberts made it a moot point by defeating challenger Billy Williams.

A Jan. 8 date has been tentatively set to swear in the 1994-95 Council.

Second Chief discusses health care and other tribal issues for 1994

by Shelly Crow, Second Chief

As we design a new health care system, we are trying to plan for all ages — the new mother, baby, our elders, and parents who are trying to provide for their families.

Times are rough in the U.S., especially in Oklahoma; the economy has been hit hard.

Please pray for the newly-elected National Council to offer sound direction to the office of the Principal Chief in its examination of federal, state, county, and local issues confronting the tribe.

The office of the Principal Chief is in the progress of designing a transportation services system to make the health care system, employment, and education facilities more accessible to citizens. The Principal Chief's office is also researching ways to increase employment opportunities for citizens within Creek Nation.

We request your prayers in order to better represent you in your needs and concerns. I hope our communities, churches, and ceremonial grounds will be afforded more input in designing the future of the tribe.

My family and I wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Citizen thankful for act

Editor:

I'm sure the people of our nation, along with many other nations, will rejoice at the attempt of the U.S. government to provide a small "island of right" in an "ocean of wrong" concerning American Indian artifacts.

The Native American Graves Protection Act and Repatriation Act, signed into law on Nov. 16, 1990 is, indeed, an interesting piece of legislation.

This is information that all of our citizens should be made aware of. Our people, as a nation, should pursue vigorously and demand reclamation of all items that are sacred or culturally significant to our tribe.

As a Creek citizen I would also like to see The Muscogee Nation News contribute its influence in gaining Council support in providing some type of provisions for these artifacts in the master site plan for the capitol complex. It is an area that would provide our young people with a deep and profound spirit of continuity to Creek heritage.

Citizen asserts nation is reservation

Editor:

At what point did the United States Congress rescind the reservation status of the Muscogee Nation? Could it have been during the termination or self-determination eras? Or is it possible that Congress never withdrew the status at all and the Department of the Interior took it upon themselves to withdraw the status?

In searching for the answer, I have come across some interesting findings.

"By the treaty of 1833 the United States agreed to grant a patent in fee simple to the Creek Nation of Indians for the lands assigned said nation... The right thus guaranteed by the United States shall be continued to said tribe of Indians so long as they exist as a nation and to continue to occupy the country hereby assigned them."

By the Treaty of 1856 the previous grants made to the Muscogee tribe were confirmed, with the exception of certain lands, granted by treaty, to the Seminole Nation.

If our nation, by law, is still regarded as reservation land, could there be any economic benefits to this status? The citizens of the Muscogee Nation need to ask their respective National Council representatives about such a status. To be assertive, we as a nation, must stand up for what is ours and never lose hold of the title by which it was acquired.

In brief

Human development director resigns

OKMULGEE — Muscogee (Creek) Nation Division of Human Development Director Abe McIntosh resigned his position effective Dec. 17.

McIntosh began his tribal employment shortly after Principal Chief Bill Fife assumed office. He was the tribal personnel director before heading the human development division. The division operates most of the tribal education programs.

"I doubt seriously that I can give any additional help to Chief Fife," McIntosh said. "The chief has his administration in place and his plans underway."

Immediately prior to his tribal employment, he was the City of Okmulgee personnel director. He is a retired educator, having begun his career as a science teacher and coach. He also served as a former superintendent of public schools. He concluded his education career as the head of the general education department at Oklahoma State University-Okmulgee.

McIntosh has also served the tribe as a member of the health board during one of its most controversial periods and as a member of the housing authority board of commissioners.

Judge completes judicial course work

RENO, Nev. — Muscogee (Creek) Nation District Court Judge Patrick E. Moore recently completed a tribal court jurisdiction course held at The National Judicial College in October.

The new course enables judges to focus on the following areas: the public's perception of tribal courts and judges; the function and purpose of tribal court bar examinations; how Indian gaming compacts affect state and tribal court jurisdiction; the role history plays in writing decisions involving federal Indian laws and tribal laws; and criminal and civil jurisdiction in Indian country.

Located on the campus of the University of Nevada, Reno, the college was featured on "60 Minutes" as the leading training and education center for trial judges. Since the college's founding in 1963, more than 30,000 certificates of completion have been issued to graduates, including U.S. Supreme Court Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and David Souter.

Sapulpa clinic adds dentist

SAPULPA — The Sapulpa Indian Health Center has added a new dentist to staff. Raymond F. Lala, DDS, a native of New Orleans, La., comes to Creek Nation with 15 years of general practice dentistry.

He is a graduate of the University of New Orleans, and Louisiana State University Dental School.

The two-year assignment is his first as an Indian Health Service dentist. He said Creek Nation chief dental officer Dr. Doug White's enthusiasm about the tribe convinced him to select the Sapulpa duty.

"And I liked the idea of the complete medical and dental care offered at the Sapulpa facility," Lala said.

Lala and his wife, Pbyllis, have two children: Andy, 11; and Erin, 4.

"He is good with children, friendly to the patients, and eager to get started," White said. "We know he will be an asset to our program."

The Muscogee Nation operates dental clinics in Sapulpa, Eufaula, and Okmulgee.

Council maintains judicial branch autonomy

OKMULGEE — The Muscogee (Creek) National Council voted against an amendment which would have placed the judicial branch budget under control of the tribal treasury during its November regular and quarterly session.

National Council Act 89-162, Section 101, provides for judicial branch control of "...expenditures and budget modifications within sources of revenue and approved line items." Its budget is exclusive of the general tribal budget.

The Council voted 20 in favor and two against the amendment.

In other business, the Council:

- amended NCA 93-139 to provide for total tribal funding of the community health representatives' eyeglass program for fiscal year 1994;
- amended the gaming operations authority board's attorney contract with Heskett Law Firm in order to secure their services through April 30, 1996;
- appropriated matching funds of $2,000 from the FY '94 bingo revenue account to the financially-afflicted Murrow Indian Children's Home, Muskogee, for a fundraising event;
- appropriated $5000 in supplemental funding from the FY '94 bingo revenue account to the children and family services administration's school clothing program because of program implementation and increasing applicants. Because many children of the "improvised" Hanna area did not have access to application sites, the ordinance provides that funding be provided to those children exclusively;

gram because of program implementation and increasing applicants. Because many children of the "improvised" Hanna area did not have access to application sites, the ordinance provides that funding be provided to those children exclusively;

• approved NCA 93-166, a continuing ordinance for the FY '94 comprehensive budget. National Council Act 93-139 provided for approval of two months of the FY '94 budget, which expired Nov. 30. National Council Act 93-166 allows the Council more time to make a thorough review of the budget; it provides for legislative authorization for appropriation and tribal expenditures through Dec. 31 also;

• established a natural disaster act of 1993 providing for assistance up to $500 for eligible, tribally-enrolled, household heads that have lost their possessions because of disasters. It authorizes the tribal controller to utilize $10,000 from the permanent fund account for the act;

• amended 93-158 for specification of funding source. The ordinance appropriates funds for the inspection and reporting of repairs for Creek Nation Muskogee Bingo and provides for the establishment of a select committee. The amendment authorizes funding be appropriated from the Muskogee bingo operations account.

Cultural office explains mission, seeks citizens' assistance

OKMULGEE — From missionary accounts to anthropological studies, the Muscogee (Creek) Nation has relied on non-Indians to document traditional culture — thus the Enfoletv Momen Opvynaka Lvce (the office of cultural education) was established in February 1993.

As tribes are attempting to reclaim political power through self-governance, the Muscogee Nation is also trying to reclaim cultural responsibility and maintain traditional culture, values, and ideas. Objectives of the office include researching traditional Creek culture and history from a tribal point of view, while introducing ideas and issues which will promote the tribe's cultural and intellectual growth. Language preservation is a priority, as are efforts to establish a tribal resource center.

Currently, the office is conducting two projects which require community input:

- a cultural resources directory listing Muscogee artists, dancers, storytellers, etc., and citizens with traditional skills or knowledge which could be utilized for future projects; and

- seeking information regarding community projects which have been designed to promote awareness and appreciation of Creek traditions.

Completing these projects will assist the office in becoming a source of information, direction, and technical assistance for community-based cultural programs. For more information, contact staff members Timmy Thompson or Rochelle Vaughan by writing: P.O. Box 580, Okmulgee, OK 74447 or call (918) 756-8700.

penses incurred on this project and will make a claim to the Universities Research Association, Inc. for reimbursement. Currently, we are looking into investment opportunities with Conoco and Zebco, further stimulating economic growth.

The New Year offers much promise. Basic developmental activities underway are for:

- business investments;
- infrastructure upgrading;
- innovating the division of human development; and
- overhauling our health care system.

Progress in these areas will shape the future of our tribe.

In 1994, the primary mission of the executive branch will be to strengthen the family and community. Every department within the office of administration will focus on strengthening the family and community — two units which are the foundation upon which our nation is built.

Currently, we are undergoing reorganization of the executive branch. The reorganization will build a more efficient executive branch and will require continuous effort among elected tribal officials from here forward — so that we can meet the economic and social demands of our people.

As we approach the Christmas season, let us not forget our men and women who are serving in the armed services, especially those who are on foreign soil. Let us remember our elders — who maintain our culture, traditions, government and perpetuate our identity as Muscogee people.

My family and I wish you peace and happiness for the holiday season; may every citizen, especially the children, be blessed with all the joys of Christmas and every happiness in the New Year.
